AN EXPERT'S HEALTH RULES.

New York World.

A famous New York physician, now hale and handsome at 75, sums up his half a century in medical practice and observation in these simple rules of health:

1. Be temperate in all things, in matters of amusement or study as well as in regard to foods and drinks. To be temperate in all things, however, does not imply that one must be a prohibitionist about anything.
2. Don't be afraid to go to sleep, for sleep is the best restorer of wasted energies. Sleep a certain number of hours every night, and then remember that a short nap during the day is a safer rejuvenator than a cocktail.
3. Don't worry, either about the past or the future. To waste a single hour in regret for the past is as senseless as to send good money after that which has been irreversibly lost. To fret one's self about what the future may have in store is about as reasonable as to attempt to brush back the tide of the ocean with a broom. Worry, of whatever kind, banishes contentment, and contentment is a necessity of youth.
4. Keep the mind youthful. Live in the present with all the other young people. Don't get to be reminiscence. Let the old people talk about the past, for the mere act of thinking about old things reminds the mind of its years. Reminiscences are dangerous—whether they are soothing or sweet or sad—for they characterize old age, and must be sedulously avoided by those who would be ever young.
5. Keep up with the times. Don't fall behind the procession. To accomplish this learn one new fact every day. The mind that is satisfied to live upon the lessons learned in its youth soon grows old and rusty. To keep young it must be fresh and active—that is, abreast with times. The old methods of thought and the old facts may have been correct enough once upon a time, but that time has passed. To-day they are obsolete and only amusing as relics of antiquity. To remain young, therefore, one must keep the store house of the memory clear of all such rubbish. Throw away one of the mildewed relics every day and replace it with some newer, fresher and more up-to-date fact.

Here, then, is this New York physician's secret of perennial youth in a nutshell:

Be temperate. Don't be afraid to go to sleep. Don't worry. Keep the mind youthful. And—keep up with the times!

It is not a difficult rule of life to follow. It is ever so much easier than wandering about the strange lands in search of hidden springs. It is somewhat pleasant than stewing over ill-smelling crucibles. Moreover, it has the advantage of being thoroughly practicable, which makes it well worth trying.

Ben Hill's Tribute to Lee.

When the future historian shall come to survey the character of Lee he will find it rising like a huge mountain above the undulating plain of humanity, and he must lift his eyes toward heaven to catch its summit. He possessed every virtue of our great commanders without their vices. He was a foe without hate, a friend without treachery, a soldier without cruelty, a victor without oppression, a victim without murmuring. He was a public officer without vices, a private citizen without wrong, a neighbor without reproach, a Christian without hypocrisy, and a man without guile. He was a Caesar without his ambition, Frederick without his tyranny, Napoleon without his selfishness, and Washington without his reward. He was obedient to authority as a servant and loyal in authority as a true king. He was as gentle as a woman in life, modest and pure as a virgin in thought, watchful as a Roman vestal in duty, submissive to law as Socrates and grand in battle as Achilles.

One Hundred Sons in Laws.

Boston Herald.

A few years ago, in the town of Littleton, N. H., lived a man named Ben Fiske, who was the typical New Englander. One day a visitor at his house asked him if he had a large family. "No," he replied, "I have only three girls, but I have 100 sons-in-laws."

"How is that?" asked the stranger, astonished.

"Well, stranger, it is this way: My oldest girl married a pretty good sort of a man. He counts one. The other two married good-for-nothing men. They are nothing but ciphers. As I and two ciphers make 100, you've got it."

Suggested to the Conductor.

Chicago Chronicle.

Ex-Senator William F. Sanders, of Montana, who died a few days ago in Helena, was a noted hotel character in territorial days. He was never known to "take water" and was proud of the fact. At a funeral which he once attended he said to a fellow pall-bearer as they turned away from the grave: "Some day they will bring me out here and throw dirt on me, but they can never say I ate any of it." He once handed a rather tattered bill to a railroad conductor, who commented on its dilapidated appearance. "Well," said Mr. Sanders, "if you don't like it turn it in to the company."

Nothing on the Market Equal to Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

This fact is well known to druggists everywhere, and nine out of ten will give their customers this preparation when the best is asked for. Mr. Obe Witmer, a prominent druggist of Joplin, Mo., in a circular to his customers, says: "There is nothing on the market in the way of patent medicine which equals Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy for bowel complaints. We sell and recommend the preparation." For sale by M. L. Marsh and D. D. Johnson.

NEGROES AS COTTON MILL HANDS.

Charlotte Observer.

One must needs at times go from home to hear the news, and the following is a case in point—the quotation is from the Chicago Record-Herald.

"Several textile mills to be established in North Carolina and elsewhere are to employ negro labor almost exclusively, and it appears that employers of labor in Alabama, Arkansas and Texas have been giving strong testimony in favor of the colored factory employe. One employer wrote recently to a Baltimore paper: 'Any two negroes are worth more to the manufacturer as day laborers than any three Southern white men.' Another employer declared that the negro was by far the best workman he could obtain in Alabama."

The Charleston News and Courier takes knowledge of this bit of information, and observes that the experiment with negro labor in cotton mills in Charleston and Columbia failed miserably, and adverts to the history of the Coleman Cotton Mill in our neighboring town, Concord, owned and operated exclusively by negroes. A paragraph in THE CONCORD TIMES a few days ago gives to the history of that venture a tragic aspect. It had been initiated and engineered by Warren C. Coleman, a colored man, who, by the exercise of industry and good judgment had acquired quite a little fortune. He risked it all, lost it all, and died. Our Concord contemporary gave it to be understood that this failure and disappointment were contributing causes, if not the causes, of his death. Some of the stock in the mill was sold at auction the other day and one block of 95 shares brought, if we remember the figures, ten cents—not ten cents a share, but ten cents for the 95 shares. This is to say it was absolutely worthless.

The negro as a cotton-raiser is incomparable, as a cotton-spinner, a failure. Some wit has explained this by saying that the inverting whirr of the machinery put him to sleep. The more probable cause is given by another in saying that the negro will not stick for sixty-six hours a week in a building where nothing is to be heard except the monotonous hum just referred to, when he can have so much liberty and find so easy means of subsistence in the open. But whatever the cause, the black man cannot be looked to as a reliable cotton factory operative, and for that work reliability is the first requisite.

The "Scalp Plague"

Charlotte Chronicle.

In Rowan county they have once a year what is known as a "scalp picnic," at which the farmer who has taken the greatest number of scalps is given a prize. The report made at the picnic, last week, showed 6,450 "scalps" for the previous year. One man killed 116 crows. He must have great proficiency as a "skeaker," for of all birds, the crow is the hardest to outwit. Another man had a penchant for flying squirrels and bagged 117 during the year. Jays are the specialty of another, who reported having slain 217. Yet another man had a fancy for moles and succeeded in digging up and killing 72 of these diligent little burrowers. The owl, the natural enemy of the mole, was not overlooked, and there were weasels, rats, minks, and hawks in great numbers. The object of this scalp contest, we believe, is to reduce the crop of pestiferous animals and birds in Rowan, and the idea is a good one, but flying squirrels and jaysbirds ought to be struck from the list, while more encouragement ought to be given the hawk and rat specialties.

Agonizing Burns

are instantly relieved, and perfectly healed, by Bucklen's Arnica Salve. C. Rivenbark, Jr., of Norfolk, Va., writes: "I burnt my knee dreadfully that it blistered all over. Bucklen's Arnica Salve stopped the pain, and healed it without a scar." Also heals all wounds and sores. 25c at all druggists.

THE FLOWERS COLLECTION

THE VIRGINIA ELECTION.

Atlanta Journal.

The Democrats of Virginia have held their primary election for the nomination of a governor and other State officials and the result practically means that the officers of that State for the next term have been selected. The Republicans, of course, will put out a ticket, but there is no hope whatever in their ranks that it will come anywhere near to victory against the ticket the Democrats have just named.

The most important results of the primary were the nominations of Swanson and Martin for the office of governor and United States senator, respectively. Mr. Swanson has represented a Virginia district of Congress for several terms and having always taken a prominent stand in that body there is no question of his ability to make the Old Dominion a most creditable chief executive.

Senator Martin will succeed himself in the United States Senate, having beaten Governor Montague in the race for the nomination. It was a hot struggle from the very beginning, and while Montague had all the advantage of a spendid administration in the governor's office, Martin had a similar record as senator to aid him and the people gave him the place again. While there is no doubt that he was the machine candidate, still he has served the State well and has made a record in the Senate that Virginia can well afford to endorse by returning him for another six years.

The Poet's Latest Lay.

In some portions of America it has been supposed that the national bird of Missouri is the mule. This is not so, however. A newspaper from Centralia prints the following "ode" as proof that the mule is not the greatest citizen of the state:

Long before Maud raked the hay the Missouri hen began to lay, and before the milkmaid had stirred a pegg the Missouri hen had laid an egg. The corn must rustle, the flowers must spring, if they hold their own with the barn-yard rings. If Maud is in need of a Sunday gown she doesn't hustle the hay to town, but goes to the store and buys her suit with a basketful of fresh hen fruit. If the milkmaid's bean makes a Sunday call she doesn't feed him on milk at all, but work up eggs in custard pie, and stuffs him on that and chicken fry. And when the old man robs a nest and goes to town in his speckled vest to gape and stare at the circus rings or stand round talking of crops and things, his poor wife stays at home and scowls, but is saved from want by those selfsame fowls. For while her husband lingers there she follows the cackling hen with care. Then hail, all hail the Missouri hen! Acclaim her, poet, with your pen! Throw up your hat, emit a howl for the preserving, useful fowl. Cotton may be king, I ween but the cackling hen is Missouri's queen.
