A resolution passed today asks representative in Congress to vote for a bill to be presented which will provide that when a law is declared unconstitutional by the United States supreme court and the same law is again passed by Congress and signed by the President it becomes law of the land.

The federation voted to lend its full support to the textile workers to the end that they "may advance in orderly course, through organization and education, to that happy plane of the standard work day, wages in keeping with other craftsmen, and, above all, to the point where they shall have a voice in their own working and living conditions.

Barrett declared that the textile workers constitute the largest body of workers in the state, "yet they receive less pay, work longer hours per week and have the poorest working conditions," and further stated they are under the absolute control of employer, not only in the mills but in their homes.

Mr. Oliver's talk was interesting, He is a trainmen who went in the shop men's strike last summer and is still out. Barrett asked him what about the negroes who have gone from the south to Pennsylvania, and Oliver said they are given inferior work, such as wiping engines and are often thrown

Harry, Etaugh told the convention that the textile operators are facing the prospect of a strike in the near future. He asked the federation delegates not to condemn the mill operatives in case they strike, but hely crystalize sentiment in favor of the textile workers, stating that in North Charlotte the mills are controlled by officers of the law and that workers are discharged for no other reason than that they joined labor un

Factionalism was given a blow by the convention just ended, and now it ap-pears, from the lack of dispute at the convention, the federation people are more in accord than they have been for some time. There may be some under-current of dissestifaction, because of the some time. regime of J. M. Ellis, of Spencer, who was president last year, but it did not become a public matter. Ellis did not attend the convention although he was slated to preside.
