a sob. The way of deliverance was not clear. A wrinkled native woman, an Aleut or an Eskimo, who evidently Doomsdorf's wife, looked up at her with dark inscrut able eyes from the opposite side of the room.

The whole picture went home to Bess in a glance. Lenore was hudiled in a chair before the stove, yielding herself to the blessed warmth, already shaking off the mi-apathy induced by the night's chill. But as yet there was no hope in her. She was shivering, helpless impotent. Ned bent over her, his arms about her, now and then giving her sips from a cup of hot liquid that he held in his hand. His care his tender solicitude, struck Bess with a sense of unutterable irony. Evidently he had no suspicion of the real truth.

He looked up as Bess entered. Partbecause the light was dim, partly cause he was absorbed in the work of caring for Lenore to the exclusion of all other thought, he failed to see the drawn look of horror on Bess' "I'll need a little help here, Miss Gilbert," he said. "I want to get this girl to bed. The night

"That's the law up here-that the weak have to serve the strong. I've beat the North at its own game, and it serves me, just as you're going to serve me now. You can go out there if you like-if you prefer to die. There's no boat to carry you off. There never will be a boat to carry you off."

He paused, smiling grimly; then with an explosive motion, pulled back the lid of the stove and threw in another log. "Sit down, why don't you?" he invited. "I don't insist on my servants standing up always in my presence. You'll have to sit down sometime, you know."

Lenore, wholly despondent, sank back in her seat. To show that he was still her protector, Ned stood behind her, his hands resting on the back of her chair. Bess stole to a little rough seat between them and

A single great chair was left vacant, almost in the middle of the circle. Doomsdorf glanced once about the room as if guarding against his prisoners, then sat down easily himself. "Excuse me for not making you known to my woman," he
