Moved His Home During the Night.

Rocky Mount, March 28.—Fearing a faulty title to the lot upon which he had erected his home, Tom Powell, with the assistance of a large number of friends moved his house during the night from the lot on which it was located to one just across the road of which title he was sure as to its clarity.

Mr. Powell, it was said, bought the lot some time ago, thinking that the title was clear. It developed later however, that J. T. Nichols had obtained a judgment against the former owner of the lot which complicated matters to some extent.

Despite the fact that Mr. Nichols had told the purchaser that he would not interfere with his occupying the lot, Mr. Powell became restless and uneasy. He solicited the aid of about 100 friends and during the night moved his home from the doubtful lot to one of surety.

A distance said to be more than fifty feet. The act caused a great deal of surprise as well as comment. While passersby were marveling at the sudden change, members of Mr. Powell's household went about the preparation of the morning meal as though nothing had happened.
