The hopes of the wets rose a bit when Emory R. Buckner, who since leaving the law firm of Elihu Root to become federal attorney in New York City, has made an extraordipary drive to enforce the Volstead act by padlock, suggested that the law be modified to permit each state to define intoxicating liquor.

Mr. Buckner's suggestion was made in an address at Fordham Manor Church. A similar solution on enforcement problem was proposed in a statement in New York by William H. Hirst, formerly counsel for the brewers' association.

Mr. Buckner said a patrnership between the United States and the states was necessary for prohibition enforcement and that at present there was a "muddle and carnival of crime' CROSSING SMASH where there were no state enforcement acts.
