DIPLOMACY MAY BE NECESSARY TO SET QUESTIONS OF LAW

Hearst Charges That Calles Offered Money To U. S. Senators Brings Up Delicate Question.

WANT MEXICAN AS WITNESS

He May Claim That Consular Officers Are Immune And Refuse To Testify.

Washington, Dec. 12.—(AP)—Turning for facts in its investigation of charges that President Calles of Mexico, sought to pay $120,000 to four American senators, the special senate committee has unearthed a problem that may require diplomatic settlement.

Similar subpoenas demanding their testimony before the committee have been issued for Wm. Randolph Hearst, publisher of the papers printing the charges against Calles, and Victor Watson, managing editor of the New York Daily Mirror.

The committee's right to summon Elias is questioned by the Mexican ambassador here, who maintains that where international law is involved, consular officers are immune from subpoenas. He doubts that Elias would come to Washington to testify, while the senate committee led by Chairman Reed, republican, Pennsylvania, insists upon its right to summon Elias and demand his testimony.

Whether the committee plan of action definitely will lead the Elias problem to the State department for discussion with the Mexican government has not been revealed by committee members. State department has kept clear of the embryo controversy, although a disposition was noticeable to agree with the Mexican ambassador's viewpoint.
