IN ANSWER TO A QUESTION.

We have been asked for information as to whether the different races of man (Moguls), Caucasian (European or white men), Amerie u Indians, Africans (including the Nubians, Abyssinians, Poolahs. Negross, Hottentots, etc.), East Indian or Malayan (Telingans, Malays, Australias), and Polynesians (South ing.

We cannot attempt to discuss the the ory of unity or diversity of origin of of the races, or rather to give any outline of the two sides of this great question, for it would consume some time it preparation and the subject would not interest the general reader. Indeed a proper treatment of the subject of the unity or diversity of origin of the races includes the great questions which are intimately connected with it, such as the theories of the effects of physical Orange and violet accord passably, yet agents in producing varieties in animals and man; the phenomena of hybridiza tion; the geographical distribution, migrations, and affiliations of the species; disputed points in archeology, philology, chronology and physical geography; and the bearings of the results of the studies of men of science in these subjects upon theological opinions of the day. We must therefore dismiss the subject with the simtle statement, that so high an authority as Agassiz has given it as his opinion that. the races are
