ORGANIZING FARMERS Movement Successful Because Started by Farmers Themselves.

Davidson county, N. C., has an agricultural organization with headquarters at the county seat in Lexington. Local associations have been formed at every one of 20 different points in the county. At Holly Grove is to be found the real reason and the exciting cause for the "better farming tour" of the Davidson county agricultural association with its twice and sometimes thrice a day speakings and daily corn shows, held in storehouses, churches, schoolhouses, old out-of-the-way buildings, fraternity halls, opera houses, and at cross roads under spreading oak trees says a writer in Southern Farming.

In 1910 some half-dozen progressive spirits formed themselves into a union called the Davidson county good roads and agricultural association. Was this organization formed to hold corn and thus boost the price? No, the merchants were paying as much in Lexington as elsewhere. Was the price of cotton too low, and was this association formed to cut down the acreage? No, the price of cotton had been very satisfactory to most of them. Was it formed to protest against the low price of wheat, a leading crop of this county? No, wheat had been selling for more than a dollar a bushel, which most of them felt was nearly enough. What, then, could have actuated these men in the novel movement?

The object of the association was to arouse interest among the farmers and create an incentive for growing more corn, wheat and other food and feed products per acre, and thus take advantage of the most excellent market which had quietly, but surely sprung up right at their own doors.

So the movement was set on foot and the agitation began. The first auxiliary association was formed in Holly Grove township. Perhaps the worst roads in the county in 1910 were to be found in that township. Now they are the best. Some of the poorest land occurs here, but Holly Grove township for 1911 made the largest acre yield of corn made by any adult farmer in the State.
