The Old Schoolhouse And The New.

Five years ago we went to school in a little poorly furnished one-room schoolhouse with rude home made benches. Of course, we could not put up with this for long.

The first improvement attempted was to collect money to buy patent desks. This attempt, however, failed and we bought no desks that year.

Next year the teacher appointed a committee to collect money for a library. We were more successful in this and bought a good $30 library.

Our next teacher was one of the ablest and best rural school teachers in the country. She at once saw the need of a better school building and we went to work for it. We organized a Women's Betterment Association, had several entertainments, such as ice cream suppers, oyster suppers, box parties, etc., and raised a good sum of money, and with what the county and State gave, and with the work the men in the district did, we soon had a schoolhouse as good as any rural district in the county. It has a cloak room at the entrance and plenty of large windows.

The building is painted white and green, and is furnished with an organ, stove, patent desks, several large maps, good blackboards, an emblem bearing the school motto, "Excelsior," water cooler and individual drinking cups and several nice pictures, three which we won as prizes for doing the most betterment work.

We have also bought four new lamps and a large clock since last school. In the belfry hangs a large bell and just beneath it is the name of the school in large black letters.—Ollie Shields, in Progressive Farmer.
