

NATIONAL AID FOR ROADS.

This Will Be An Issue In the Next Congress, Says President of National Automobile Association.

"Congress will have the good roads question to answer at its forthcoming session, and the accumulating demand from all sections of the country makes clear that the issue must be met," asserted President John A. Wilson of the American Automobile Association, who was in Washington recently enroute to the Pacific Coast to preside on motorcar day at the American Road Congress.

"With over two million automobiles in use, the motorists now make up an army of road users entitled to equal consideration with all other citizens," says Mr. Wilson, though some of us can remember an earlier period when we were considering a special class, subject to all kinds of hampering legislation and considered chiefly from a revenue producing standpoint.

"But we have finally obtained nearly all those rights which belong to the average citizens, and there is one thing in which we take a great deal of pride and satisfaction. In encouraging people to travel from town to town and from state to state, we have accelerated astoundingly the national viewpoint. Nevertheless, we must confess to a belief that comprehensive highway improvement has only begun, for it is now receiving deserved attention from a growing number of men who have most to do with the affairs of the nation."

"Speaker Champ Clark of the House of Representatives in a recent 'home state' speech gave a characteristic talk in which he said:

"First and last tens of thousands of dollars' worth of wagons and buggies have been broken up and destroyed because of the bad roads in Missouri, and hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of horses, mules and oxen have been wasted in the same manner—perhaps the amount would run into millions.

"I know this is not so lofty a theme as to discuss international questions of great pith and moment, but the problems of improving our roads is practical and can be solved. What's more, it ought to be solved. It is of immediate and pressing importance. Good roads mean increase in population—increase in wealth—increase in church and school attendance—increase in social affairs—in short, increase in the joy of living."

Former Secretary of State, William Jennings Bryan in an argument against any extensive military defense expenditure set forth that $5,000,000,000 in eleven years "would gridiron the United States with hard roads twelve miles apart, so that no citizen would live more than six miles from a good road which would enable him to go anywhere."

Mr. Bryan also said in an interview at Omaha recently that it is only a question of time when the Federal Government will lend assistance in the building of interstate roads.

"The significant feature of Mr. Bryan's words is his reference to roads," comments Chairman George C. Diehl of the A. A. A. Good Roads Board. "This can be no other than the conception of a national system which will correlate and co-ordinate the system of state highways, just as the state systems form the framework for the county and township systems of highways. The A. A. A. believes this ultimate development but hardly possible in the beginning. An interstate system would be tangible and impressive and would tend to unify in our present somewhat haphazard systems of highways. Mr. Bryan's utterance is an encouraging indication of the trend of thought among the men who shape our legislative policies.

"Not long ago the chairman of State Highway Commission of Maine, referring to Federal cooperation in good roads, asserted that the first expenditure in a state like Maine should be for connected seacoast roads which would permit of a quick mobilization of troops at any threatened point of attack. A similar argument had been previously put forth in regard to the Pacific Coast and the Mexican border. The great value of highways and automobiles in the European conflict has been completely demonstrated and these two factors are certain to figure in national legislation relating to military preparedness."

Time Savers For The Cook.

Stone jars with tight fitting covers make excellent bread boxes. Articles should touch each other as little as possible while frying.

Baked beans will be better if they are parboiled before they are put into the pot for baking.

When frying be sure that the fat is hot enough to answer the test before the article is put in.

Pieces of stale bread may be saved for brown betty pudding, queen pudding or bread muffins.

Meats and fish should be taken from the ice some time before frying or they will cool the fat.

Keep the dishes containing food closely covered and the refrigerators will be kept from odors.

Too many articles should not be put in the hot fat at any one time, or the temperature will be lowered and the article absorb the fat.

When separating yolks from whites of eggs sometimes a speck of yolk slips into the white. To remove this, dip a clean cloth into warm water and wring it dry, and it will cling to it at once.

Bread and Meat

Saves the Day.

Ask the average farmer if he made corn enough to do him. Nearly all of them will tell you yes, or nearly so. This is unprecedented. This is the policy which saves the country. To have no bread and meat, and compelled to buy, puts a farmer in critical condition financially.

Attractive Advertisements.

The advertisements in the Reporter are set attractively, and are read by the readers of the paper same as news. Indeed they are news of bargains. Buy your goods of a live advertiser, and you are mighty apt to get live goods, at a bargain.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy Cures Colds, Croup and Whooping Cough.

When Baby Has the Croup.

When a mother is awakened from sound sleep to find her child who has gone to bed apparently in the best of health struggling for breath, she is naturally alarmed. Yet if she can keep her presence of mind and give Chamberlain's Cough Remedy every ten minutes until vomiting is produced, quick relief will follow and the child will drop to sleep to awaken in the morning as well as ever. This remedy has been in use for many years with uniform success. For sale by all dealers.
