New Use For Autos.

Greensboro Record.

There are about $25,000 or $30,000 worth of automobiles, F. O. B. Detroit, in Guilford county, which are rightfully the property of the county, according to officers' estimate. These are the Fords which are engaged in a vigorous interstate traffic in whiskey and are as a consequence forfeited to the county upon capture in the business. Every day now the office of the sheriff is receiving calls to the various parts of Guilford to come after an automobile which is unloading whiskey by the wholesale in the community. The deputies go and often with them the high sheriff but the arrests are difficult to make. Despite this, however, there are automobiles captured with their laden of whiskey occasionally, one being the result of a chase yesterday.

At least fifty Fords are engaged in bringing whiskey from Virginia across Rockingham and into Guilford, certain of the officers believe. The town of Kideaway Va., ten miles over the line, is said to get the business for the dispensary located there. Some of the cars are not owned in Guilford but are doing a passing business, and carrying part of the load further South into the State.

The others look upon this method of getting whiskey here as productive of the chief supply with which the retail blind tiger trade is carried on. The present force of men is insufficient to break up the traffic, for while the sheriff has a corps of about twenty deputies most them are officers in name only and are working at farming or some other business for a living. Only about six deputies are regularly employed. One of these is in High Point; one is confined to the office of the sheriff; two are paid salaries at the mill villages where their work is chiefly done; and two are doing a business uptown on the free basis. The others do not count when police work is to be done.

Under these conditions there is very little work being done in the rural sections and the whiskey dealing goes on with practically no official check. The uptown deputies make their living on fees and if they went into the country they would lose their business in the city for the day and probably chase a whiskey auto through day and night in a vehicle which they would have difficulty in getting the county to pay for; and would fail in all likelihood of earning an arrest fee even. What seems to be needed is more men. Two rural constables on salary to spend their time in a patrol of the county, making a specialty of interference with the illegal whiskey traffic could break up the business. They might even capture enough cars engaged in the moving of whiskey to pay their salaries for a time at least.
