RUM-RUNNERS DOING BUSINESS

Government Is Unable To Cope With Them, Official Say.

New York, March 22.—Reports that six more rum laden vessels had left the Bahamas for American waters and that three schooners believed to be the advance guard of a spring rum fleet from St. Pierre, Miquelon, had dropped anchor off the Rhode Island coast, today added to the worries of prohibition enforcement authorities.

R. Q. Morrisk, newly appointed zone enforcement chief, met the news with the statement that there was nothing he could do about it. The federal prohibition enforcement office has no fleet to send out to cope with the situation, he said, and was compelled to rely on the coast guard and customs service to break it up.

Captain Reed, coast guard commander for the New York division, said there were three coast guard vessels in his district which has a coast line of about 200 miles—doing "occasional" work against the rum-runners. He pointed out that the coast guard had other duties to perform.

Customs authorities said they had the cutter Lexington on the trail of the rum-runners, but declared she was far from able to cope with the traffic.

Touching on the wireless message flashed last night from the rum-running yacht Ister to a man at Times Square hotel and purporting to advise him that a small boat of liquor was drifting off the Highlands, Captain Reed declared he was proceeding on the theory that it was a code message.

The message as received by customs officers read: "Motor boat adrift. Headed for New Inlet. Yours for the salvage. Ister."

The man to whom the message was addressed sent two messages to the Ister, the first reading: "The agent will be out this afternoon" and the second, "Am sending three boats to different points."

The Ister, it was said, is loaded with Scotch whiskey taken on at Glasgow, from which port the British fleet was expected to operate.

The six vessels which customs authorities were notified had cleared from the Bahamas with liquor and which have been put officially on the "suspicious list" although they are ostensibly bound for other ports, are:

British schooner Lucile M. Smith, 3,600 cases; British schooner Sadie A. Nickles, 1,800 cases; American motorboat Truant, 400 cases; British auxiliary schooner Inia, 700 cases; American schooner Liberty 500 cases; and American auxiliary schooner Esther, 600 cases.

Edward Barnes, assistant solicitor for customs service, has begun an investigation of the registry of three vessels classed as American. If they are found to be American registered, it was said, they will be seized under Attorney General Daugherty's ruling that the American ships must travel "dry" throughout the world.

Jno. W. Redding and Jesse Southern, good citizens of Meadows township, were visitors here yesterday.
