

Reduce Auto Deaths By Enforcing Law

Washington, March 19.—Conservation of human life—probably held in more careless regard in America than any other nation—is the prime objective of a nation-wide movement launched today by the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety.

The conference, headed by Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, after more than a year's study of traffic conditions, announced that rigid enforcement of traffic laws will do more than anything else to reduce the automobile accident and death rate.

Hoover regards the tremendous number of deaths on the streets and highways of the United States as a blot on the nation, although there are indications that during the last year conditions have improved. Widespread publicity given to careless driving is believed to have had its effect, encouraging the safety advocates to feel that more can be accomplished during the coming year.

Street and highway conditions in cities, big and small, and in rural districts are regarded far from desirable. In the national capital the situation is serious. In the last few months an assistant secretary of the treasury and a United States senator have been hit by automobiles in the business section of the city. The senator was a victim of a nit-and-run driver whose identity has not been discovered.

"One feature of the conference program for the year will be an intensive study of the problem of adequate traffic enforcement," today's report said.

"New committees will be appointed by Secretary Hoover to deal with the following:

- (1) Uniformity of laws and regulations.
- (2) Enforcement.
- (3) Causes of accidents.
- (4) Metropolitan traffic facilities."

Evening Up

"Well," said Farmer Briggs to the artist, "how much will you charge to paint my farmhouse with an evening up?"

"Oh, fifty dollars," said the artist.

"Done," said the farmer, "I'll pay you tomorrow."

"In the course of the painting was finished," said the artist, "but what the farmer forgot to paint in the farmer."

"Yes, I like it," said the farmer, "but what's the painter's me?"

"The artist tried to pass off his bill with a joke."

"Oh," he said, "you've gone inside to get my fifty dollars."

"Oh, have I?" was the farmer's reply. "I'm coming out soon, and if I do I'll pay you in the meantime, we'll hang it on and wait."
