A Lovely Land.

While on Moore's Knob, I take my stand,
And view the land both north and west,
As far as mortal eyes can see, I see sweet beauties on each hand,
In this land that I like best, the land that's good enough for me,
The Saura Mountains here extend in lovely grandeur side by side;
Yes, twenty miles from end to end, from north to south, not quite so wide,
Those thousand feet into the sky, they rear their forms above the sea,
While river Dan goes rushing by, and as it frolics in its glee, it bathes their feet while on its way,
And as it, dashing, splashing goes, it makes sweet music night and day,
And as it, roaring, foaming, flows, entrances with its liquid lay,
Three rivers side by side it seems, whose water in the sunlight gleams,
While Demon's Rock stands in its pride,
On the bank of the river side, and water falls so grand, I find;
And healing springs of every kind, Yade Mecon, Moore's and Piedmont, too,
Will give the best of health to you, The Pilot, too, so fine and grand,
Stands in this lovely, healthy land, All of these things are grand to see,
This land is good enough for me.

No Thanks For The Buggy Ride

There is a certain farmer who has hitherto resisted the metallic call of the motor car. Lately having a hundred-mile trip to make he hitched up the old horse and buggy. When he had joggled over the same route 32 years ago it had been a simple enough journey—pleasant leisure on the highway and simplified comfort at the wayside inns. But this time the hundred-mile drive was a queer stunt racking the nerves and even fraught with hardships.
Refreshment for man and beast, the traveler soon learned, is now but a tradition. Still plenty for man if his digestion be strong, what with hot-dog stands and chicken-and-waffle houses; but where, oh where, is the kindly watering trough? Oil and gas flow at every crossroads but oats and hay have become scarce and elusive. Where once the hitching post had stood sturdy and staunch, the No Parking signs now leers from behind a double row of parked cars. Each hotel boasts its garage but the clerk raises his brows when you ask him to stable your horse. The farmer found himself constantly crowded into the ditch by whizzing automobiles. The hard paving made the horse's feet sore and by the end of the hundred miles all four shoes were worn out.
And so this spring will no doubt see a shiny new roadster bumping over the barn threshold and one more faithful animal turned out to pasture, well content.—Exchange.

EXAMINATION OF ALL DRY AGENTS

The Best Prohibition Agents In Western North Carolina Will Have Hard Time Passing, Mr. Sharpe Said.

Charlotte, N. C., March 28.—The best prohibition agents in Western North Carolina will have a hard time passing a civil service examination, Ben C. Sharpe, deputy prohibition administrator for this district said today.

Prohibition agents go under civil service control April 1 and will be given six months to prepare for the test.

If many agents lose their jobs because of failure to pass the test, college boys will be required to take their places, Mr. Sharpe asserted, adding that he did not believe in "rah-rah agents."

"The rah-rah boys are all right at a ball game, but I'm afraid they won't do for chasing bootleggers," he said.

The administrator expressed fear that some of his best agents would fail to make the passing mark on such a test. He explained that he did not think "book sense" was a necessity in catching bootleggers.

Mr. Sharpe praised the present force in Western North Carolina. "They all know how to get their man and convict him," he declared.
