Cinnamon Toast Is Tea-Time Variation

By Jane Rogers

WHEN a friend or two drops in unannounced and informally at tea time, do not be alarmed if the cookie jar is empty and the cake box vacant. Cinnamon toast is one of the most delicious accompaniments to the hospitable afternoon cup of tea and the materials for it are always in the kitchen. Sugar, ice, is a highly efficient quick energy food and the sweet browned coating will supply fuel for the rest of the day's work.

If the children are at home, cinnamon toast with a glass of milk will make a wholesome and nourishing afternoon snack, and they'll love it.

This is the way I have always made it: Get and toast slices of bread. Spread them with butter and sprinkle generously with a mixture of cinnamon and sugar—the latter because of its richness in the eye of sugar. When the toast is brown close to the stove. When the sugar has melted and turned slightly, remove the toast from the oven and cut off the crusts.

Mt. Airy Negro Ends Own Life

Mount Airy.—Jess Prather, 200-pound Negro janitor of the Bank of Mount Airy, committed suicide Tuesday night by shooting himself through the mouth, using a revolver borrowed from the bank. He died instantly.

Prather, about 67 years old, went home Tuesday afternoon, after finishing his duties at the bank, with him he took a .38 pistol. About 9 o'clock Tuesday night, he went into a room apart from his family and fired the fatal shot into his mouth. A note left behind asked that the gun be returned to the bank—it belongs to the bank.

No reason has been assigned for Prather's act. He was known all over Mount Airy and well liked. He had been with the bank several years and was a familiar figure in the business district. He had a home on Old Fancy Gap highway, about three and one-half miles from town. He was twice married and is survived by his second wife and a large number of children.

Authorities investigating the suicide said an inquest may be held, although the presence of the note and fact that he took the gun home with him are generally conceded sufficient evidence of suicide intent.

MORE HELP FOR THE STATES

SENATE PASSES BILL PROVIDING $500,000,000 ADDITIONAL RELIEF FOR DESTITUTE.

Washington, March 30.—The Senate today passed a bill providing $500,000,000 to halt the march of misery and hunger across the nation.

If the House approves the measure, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation soon will begin pouring a golden stream of dollars into the gaping pit of the depression. It will not be a loan, but an outright gift that will attempt to erect a barrier of dollars between unemployed Americans and destitute.

Thirty minutes before the bill was driven through the Senate, 55 to 17, the cry of "dole" was raised, and Senator Fess (R., Ohio), opposed the measure by pleading with his colleagues "not to let their hearts overcome their better judgment."

The bill empowers the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to borrow $500,000,000 which, in turn will be dealt out to the various states. There are two ways in which a state may get this money.

Supposing, for instance, Ohio has spent $3,000,000 of its own money on unemployment relief. It then is eligible to receive from the federal government one-third of that sum—or $1,000,000.

In addition, if Ohio can establish that all its money for unemployment relief is exhausted it becomes eligible for an additional gift—the size of which shall be determined by the administrator appointed by the President.

Today's vote brought victory to "Young Bob" La Follette, the self-conscious son of "Old Bob," who has fought this battle for a year.

In the last session of Congress he watched a similar bill die in the House. Months of extensive committee hearings convinced him starvation and destitution was ahead in the land and that the only way to remedy it was to appropriate money quickly and pour it into the areas where want was most acute.

He dashed nervously around the floor today, consulting with Senators Wagoner (D., New York), and Cestigan (D., Colorado), who sponsored the bill with him. Occasionally he would pause, his thick black hair tumbling into his eyes, to beat down a sortie by the Republican old guard, which taunted him by shouting "dole."

Fess argued passionately against embarking "upon a policy we can never retrace."

"Open the doors of the federal treasury with this bill," he shouted, "and you will never be able to close them again. You are establishing a policy of a dole, and no man here will live to see the day when it will end."

Around Fess' banner rallied Republicans from the conservative benches. Fundamentally it was a clash between two philosophies of life—that of La Follette who believes and says that economic theories will not feed a starving man; that of Fess, who insists on maintaining "sound principles" of government at any price.

But when the afternoon of violent oratory had ended and Vice President Garner shouted "the clerk will call the roll," Fess could muster only 17 votes. Those opposing the bill: Democrats—two—Bailey, Gore. Republicans—15—Austin, Carey.

A PITIFUL CASE.

Chicago.—An impoverished father, lying near death, unfolded a grim story of how his desperate struggle to feed his eleven children killed two of them and made four others critically ill.

Not until doctors told him that he had only a few hours to live did Joseph Frapaselli, 51, reveal that poisoning of his entire family was caused by a dead pig he found in an alley and brought home for a feast—the first full meal his children had had in weeks.

Ten days ago, Frapaselli, released from his hospital cot, he was returning from work thinking of empty borders and his undernourished children. Although he labored for days a week as a city street cleaner, he had not been paid in months. He himself had gone without food so his children might eat.

As he walked through an alley his eyes fell on a dead pig, discarded in a can behind a restaurant. Quickly he summoned his brother-in-law and they took the seventy-five-pound animal home.

The children, Frapaselli remembered, scarcely could wait while their mother cooked the meat which Frapaselli had ground into sausage. To celebrate their good fortune, Frapaselli and his wife summoned several neighbors and relatives to the feast.

To make sure that the meat was untainted, Frapaselli himself tasted then ate the liver. There were no ill effects.

For two days the family feasted. There was happiness in the small, poorly furnished home for the first time in weeks.

Last Friday James, 9, suddenly became ill. He died the next day. Frapaselli told doctors poisoning probably was caused by mercury which the boy had eaten.

The same day that James died, Anthony, 8, was stricken. He died Sunday. In quick succession Dorothy, 7; Frances, 11; Frapaselli himself and six other children became violently ill. Physicians and Frances and Dorothy probably would not recover and the condition of Jennie, 14, and Joseph, was critical.

Police questioned Frapaselli repeatedly, he affirmed his belief that macaroni was to blame. He complained that because he was employed he was not permitted to accept relief and that because he was not paid he could not buy enough food. Then, when doctors said he was near death, he told of bringing home the dead pig.

Mrs. Frapaselli, 40, slightly ill, was was frantic. Doctors and nurses relieved her of the burden of caring for the entire family.

Hurried examinations were made of the others at the dinner, but authorities said they believe no more would be stricken.

APRIL FOOL FUN

APRIL FOOL'S DAY is a most accommodating date, for it gives foolish people an opportunity to be as foolish as they like. A party's the thing, and be sure to forget the addresses of all the sensible people you know, because they wouldn't care to come anyway. Send along a gay little paper clown in a red envelope to summon your guests and write on his balloon: Now is the time for all good fools, To put their masks upon the shelf Dress in your raiment of cap and bells Come, and be yourself. Black and white dominoes are favorites with the men, while girls like to wear red and white as a rule. So give the men white balloons with a black-and-white picture of some comedian cut from a magazine; and give the girls red balloons with a photograph of a partner for one of the pictures on the men's balloon. For example such well-known co-stars as Wheeler and Wooley, Burns and Allen, Ed Wynn and his "horse," two of the Marx brothers, etc. These may be supper partners or partners for the grand march which is done with hoops and sticks, and thus proves a very lively way to begin the dancing. A foolish but very exciting tag dance, is to provide some one with a Will Roger's cowboy hat and a rope and let him lasso his partner with whom he then dances, while her ex-partner swings the lariat. A cracker-eating relay is also good for plenty of laughs. The men line up on one side of the room and the girls on the opposite side. Some one shoots a toy pistol and "they're off." Each man must eat two crackers, run to the girl opposite, kneel and whistle a tune which the girl recognizes. Announce, before the race starts, that the "winner takes all," and explain afterwards that he takes all the crackers to eat, or takes all of the girls for a walk around the block.

A Merry Table A merry looking table may be set using red circles of cardboard scattered over a white cloth. In the center place a clown's white cap with red flowers for the brim. When the cap is lifted the center of the flower-brim is filled with sections of a jig-saw puzzle which everyone must sit down on the floor to put together, after the supper. For favors, make funny characters out of lolly-pops with marshmallow hat, fig bodies and gum-drop feet.

Red and White Supper Menu Here is a menu with foods fit for kings and fools—and no foolin'. The recipes serve eight.

Clown Cocktail Radish Roses Celery Curis Chicken and Ham Shortcake Grapefruit, Cucumber and Pimiento Salad Deep Dish Cherry Tarts Coffee

Clown Cocktail: Simmer one-third cup of sugar and one-half cup water for three minutes. Add the syrup from two 8-ounce cans of pineapple tidbits and one-fourth cup lemon juice, and chill. Halve and seed one cup of white grapes, and combine with the tidbits in eight cocktail glasses. Pour over the syrup, and chill. Before serving, add three or four tiny wedges of cranberry jelly to each glass.

Chicken and Ham Shortcake: Make a white sauce of two tablespoons butter, two tablespoons flour, one and one-half cups of milk and the contents of two 8-ounce cans of evaporated milk. Add the slightly beaten yolk of one egg; then add the contents of one 12-ounce can of chicken, one cup of diced cold boiled ham and two tablespoons diced pimiento. Add two cups cooking sherry, and season to taste. Serve between and on top of split hot baking-powdered biscuits which have been buttered.*
