around and said he had an order for our arrest. The warrant was sworn out by Mr. Ickes, the Superintendent of Public Works at Washington, and the charge against us was disposition of mortgaged property, towit, one green truck and one nondescript mangy dog.

"This here's a hell of a mess we are in now," said Cooney, and he begun to think about how Fonsy and Sebe and that Dry Crowd would laugh when they found it out.

About this time John Tucker appeared on the scene again, and everybody was glad to see him. In the meantime, the Sheriff asked us:

"What you Mutts gonna do about this thing?" and he jangled nine pairs of handcuffs.

Well, we was all led to the court house, and as we filed up the steps into the court room, I'll say it was a black day for Stokes county.

But right behind us walked our counsel, and as soon as our case was called John got up and told the Judge that these men were citizens of Stokes county, and it was entirely beneath their dignity to be haled into court on the trifling charge of the dispersion of personal property; that the dog in question had been seized by the President of the United States to be used in the canned foods for C. C. C. camps; and that the truck mentioned in the bill of indictment had been commandeered by Washington curio hunters and was now in the possession of the Smithsonian Institute. Further than this, Tucker argued, the weather is entirely too hot to argue.

The judge yielded to the fine reasoning of the former Danbury lawyer and dismissed the case.

Seeing The City.

Our bunch not only taken in the sights of the Fair, but we tried to see the interesting things about the city of Checawgo as well, so we could tell the whole thing when we got back home.

One day Cooney says "Boys, let's go down to the stock market."

This news was pleasing to P. C., who was powerful interested in cattle, and Hence Flinchum had told him before he left Danbury that if he run across a fine young bull at a bargain to bring it back with him.

But Cooney did not have the cow pens in mind when he said stock market. What he meant was that place where in 1929 they say the panic started, when men lost their fortunes gambling in paper, so Pid was disappointed when we found ourselves at a great hall where folks was jumping and hollering like wild injuns, with papers in their hands, and tapes was running wild instead of steers.

I'll tell you that was a exciting place though, and we seen many folks buying and selling stocks and bonds, and I was surprised to see Mayor John Hutcherson walking around like a capatalist. He said he was taking a vacation while they audited his books. He told us to come outside where he had his Ford parked, where we could talk.

We found he had his car loaded to the ridge pole with packages and Cooney asked him what he was hauling, and the Mayor said them was Walnut Cove bonds which he had bought at a bargain. He said he was aiming to haul them home, but his tires was weak and he thought he would ship them by freight.

As it is getting late, I will close. With kindest regards to all of my friends, Yours truly, SAM WOODS

Checawgo Taxes.

Now, my dear friends, I must tell you of a very unfortunate incident which overtaken us today, and which must end I am sorry to say in the early disruption of this distinguished aggregation of Stokes county citizens.

Just as we opened up headquarters today the city tax collector appeared and handed Cooney a bill for $10,000 taxes. Cooney's face turned all the colors of the rainbow as he looked at that sheet, but the nerve of our captain in wonderful, I am here to tell you, and he is equal to all emergencies. So he laughed and said, "why haven't you fellows been around to see us sooner. Have a cigar. By the way, I left by check book at the
