Well Balanced, Tasty Luncheon Can Cure Classroom Drowsiness

By Jane Rogers

NOW that the younger members of the family have returned to school, the subject of the children's lunch becomes highly important. Teachers, who have to contend with their pupils' afternoon drowsiness, will agree with this.

Whether the lunch is eaten at home, or carried to school with the books, it should be well balanced and nourishing. As vegetables cannot travel in the lunch box, lettuce in some of the sandwiches and fresh fruits must help supply the deficiency. If the children eat at home, fresh vegetables should be a part of the lunch menu.

A liberal amount of sweet should also be included, because sugar supplies the quick energy which the youngsters need during their afternoon work. Cookies or cake or some other solid "dessert" which contains sugar, should be a part of the packed lunch, to satisfy the sweet tooth, which, no doubt, is a natural recognition of the child's need for energy foods. For home consumption there are many delightful desserts which children love. Here is one of them:

Snow Pudding
1 tablespoon gelatine 1/4 cup lemon juice
1/4 cup cold water 3 egg whites beaten
1 cup boiling water stiff
1 cup sugar

Soak gelatine in cold water, dissolve in boiling water, add sugar and lemon juice, strain and cool. When thick enough to show mark of the spoon, beat until frothy, add egg whites and continue beating until mixture is stiff enough to stand alone. Pile in sherbet glasses and serve with cold soft custard.
