25. QUESTION. I am a railroad employee and am paying 3 1-2 per cent. of my pay toward a pension. My employer is paying the same. Do I also pay one per cent. to the Federal Government for old-age benefits?
 Answer: You are excluded from the taxing provisions as set forth in Title VIII of the Social Security Act since you are already covered under the Railroad Retirement Act.

26. QUESTION. I am a corporation and own all the stock in the corporation. Why am I not classed as self-employed?
 A. Every corporation is considered a legal person. Since that is the case, you work for that legal person and not for yourself.

27. QUESTION. How can I get a job in the Old-Age Benefits Office?
 A. The Bureau of Federal Old-Age Benefits is a department of the Federal Government. All employees, with the exception of a few experts in the Bureau, are taken directly from the Civil Service registers.

23. Q. I only work one day in a week. Am I included under the provisions of old-age benefits?
 A. Yes. One day's work in a year is enough to bring you into the benefits plan.

29. Q. I am 65 years old now. Do I have to pay taxes for unemployment compensation?
 A. The Social Security Act does not tax employees for unemployment compensation. A few of the State acts do. Your employer is not exempt in paying a tax on you because you are over 65.

30. Q. I am a one-man corporation and own all the stock in the corporation. Why am I not classed as self-employed?
 A. Every corporation is considered a legal person. Since that is the case, you work for that legal person and not for yourself.

31. I am in business with another partner. Will we be entitled to benefits under the Social Security Act at 65?
 A. No. Partners are self-employed, and as such are not eligible for old-age benefits. You can get a specific ruling on your particular case from the Collector of Internal Revenue.
