Putting The Car In Shape For Cold Weather Driving

By C. R. Strouse
Director, School of Automobiles,
International Correspondence Schools

WINTER is the automobile's most formidable enemy, but provided the proper precautions are taken, it is an enemy that can be rendered powerless to inflict serious damage. It is essential, however, that these precautions be taken while there is still time. It is trouble and expense to be avoided when winter really gets into its stride.

Every motorist recognizes the necessity of adding anti-freeze solution to the cooling system, but do not forget to check the freezing point frequently to make sure that the solution is not being lost by leakage or evaporation. A cracked block or burst radiator may be the penalty of forgetfulness.

Play safe with your lubrication. Failure to change in time from summer to winter motor oils causes costly damage in the long run even when it does not lead to immediate trouble. It is good economy to grade the oil frequently, instead of trying to get everything you possibly can out of it. Dilution during the life of the oil, and the grit which gradually accumulates makes it abrasive.

Few motorists realize the importance of a clean, fully-charged battery. All batteries weaken with a fall in temperature. At zero degrees, Fahrenheit, a battery has only about half the strength it normally has during the summer.

As the thermometer goes toward zero, the oil in the crankcase and on the piston walls thickens, making it more difficult for the battery to turn over and start the engine. Also, in winter the car lights burn longer and the heater is switched on most of the time. The battery is further handicapped because much winter driving is on short trips which fail to bring the battery back to full charge.

When water is added to the battery in freezing weather, run the engine for at least half an hour to dry the electrolyte and avoid the possibility that the water may freeze. Freezing may crack the battery case. Even if it doesn't, it may cause serious injury to the plates. Clean and check spark plugs at least twice during the winter. A hot spark is needed to fire the motor in cold weather. If a plug is weak, or not operating, the result may be that as much as one gallon in ten of the gasoline is being wasted. Since this goes to dilute the oil in the crankcase, the motorist suffers a double loss.

IN WASHINGTON

Editor's note-Senator Reynolds' column for this week was written at John Hopkin's Hospital, Baltimore, where the Senator is undergoing treatment to find the cause of trouble affecting his hearing.

The legislative snaris of the first week of the special session of Congress indicate that members of both Houses have benefitted from their own surveys of conditions "back home" and are determined to see that new legislation is in accord with national needs.

This is reflected in the growing pressure for tax relief for business, particularly small businesses that find it difficult to compete with monopolies; in the desire to draft a farm program that is workable and not just designed to satisfy the demand that something be done, and in the effort to avoid new government boards and commissions.

Aside from farm legislation, the tax situation is one of the most important problems confronting Congress. It is an open secret that the Congressional Committees are daily finding evidence that taxes are definitely retarding full business and industrial recovery and are determined to bring in a bill for tax revision that will be more equitable than the existing law. If the pressure for action continues, it may come at the special session, although the program calls for tax legislation at the regular session.

As soon as the farm bill is reported, probably by the time this column is printed, every effort to speed it along will be made in both Houses. It now seems certain that the members of Congress have a better picture of farm needs and are hopeful that they can be met through a well-planned law that will stand the test of time.

What will be done about the wage and hour bill is problematic. The "behind the scenes" activities in the House, where the measure is a live issue, indicate that the bill finally reported will be more favorable to the South and free from too drastic Federal control. Some believe that the law should set standards for wages and hours, leaving it to the Justice Department to enforce, rather than to set-up elaborate and separate enforcement machinery.
