A HEALTHY optimism is worth much to a young man in business. In a concern which caters to the public the man who is constantly cheerful is a valuable asset. The optimist is a business booster, a gloom chaser, and a tonic to the business group. He radiates success because he believes that success is the result of honest effort.

A manager employing a large number of salesmen recently remarked that he had one of the most complete weather reports in the world, outside of the regular government reports. He had a large force of men covering the entire country, and their daily reports were filled with excuses blaming the weather and other more or less irrelevant things for their failure to do a satisfactory amount of business. Do not be an excuse maker.

The importance of good health as a factor in business is obvious. Keep in mind, however, that no matter how healthful your working conditions are your employers cannot follow you home to see that you use your spare time to keep yourself physically and mentally fit. This is really just another way of saying—if you play all night, the boss still expects you to be "on the job" in the morning.

Hints For Motorists

IN traveling 1000 miles a car's crankshaft, clutch, transmission, universal joints and rear axle pinion each revolve 3,000,000 times. It is easy to realize, therefore, the wear and loss of power caused by insufficient, inefficient or worn-out lubricants. It is far cheaper to have your car checked and lubricated at regular intervals than to meet the repair bills that faulty lubrication so frequently entails.

If your car should fail to start because of dirty breaker points, and your tool kit lacks a fine file or emery cloth, a safety-match box will serve the purpose. Bring one of the box's abrasive strips to bear on the breaker points and you will find that you can do a satisfactory cleaning job in short order.

Keep tires properly inflated. Under-inflated tires increase your consumption of gasoline, increase the chances of a puncture, and decrease the life of the tires.

Questions and Answers
About Old-Age Insurance

Q: I am a farmer. I own my land and my stock. I manage to make a living for my family and to send my children to school. It is not so easy to carry the load at all times but none of us would be willing to accept charity. Now, I want to know what good the Social Security can ever be to me?

A: Under provisions of the Social Security Act, several million dollars have come into this State from the Federal Government within the past three years. That money helped maintain the buying power in the State and perhaps helped in providing a market for your farm crops. In the second place, whether or not you ever hold a job that will enable you to claim old-age insurance or unemployment compensation under the Social Security Act, it is quite possible that your sons or daughters will some day have jobs in commerce or industry and will be very glad to take advantage of this financial protection.

Q: I operate a lunch room and have three helpers. About two months ago, I sent in my old-age insurance tax. Last week, I got a notice saying that I must give the same account number of each of my employees on my tax return. Why is that necessary?

A: Unless the Social Security Board knows the name and account number of each of your employees they might not receive credit on the records of the Social Security Board of the wages they earned in your service. You are required to give the account number of each employee in making your tax return to the Collector of Internal Revenue. Then the Social Security Board obtains that information from the Bureau of Internal Revenue and enters it on the wage records. Every employer who deducts taxes from the wages of his employees and who matches the amounts deducted should be interested in making sure that his employees are credited with the proper amount of wages. If the account number of each employee is shown on your quarterly report, you may be certain that the proper credits will be made.

Q: Two years ago when I was working for a plumber in Delaware, I got a Social Security Account Number. In 1938, I bought a little repair shop of my own and did not need an account number. Now, I have closed out the business, moved to another state and am looking for a job. Will I be allowed to use the same Social Security account number that I got in Delaware?

A: Yes. You should never have but one account number. The number you obtained in Delaware in 1937 is good in any state at any time. Wages paid to you in the plumbing job were credited to your account on the records of the Social Security Board. A ledger sheet showing your name and account number and the wages you received while employed in the shop is still in the files of the Social Security Board. When you get another job in a shop, factory, store or any other line of industry or commerce your employer will report your wages quarterly to the Government; and the amount of your wages will later be transferred to the records of the Social Security Board. Finally, when you claim payment of your old-age insurance, your benefits will be based upon the sum total of all wages shown on your record. That is why you should have one account number and only one. Otherwise, you may lose some of the benefits to which your wage earnings will entitle you.
