- Carl Ray Flinchum, Danbury.

MAY THEY THEN SMILE AGAIN

The song of doves at dawn is a soothing sensation for the early riser when spring is stealing over the hills with its breath of jonquil, crocus and daffodil.

How infinitely more pleasant it is than to hear the hiss of the lethal bomb, or to smell the smoke from Panzer divisions in their roll of destruction and death.

May England's unmatched fortitude hold, may her immeasurable unhappiness and suffering not break her spirit that she may endure, till America loosed in its invincible power and might shall help her, as she closes the eyes of her murdered mothers and their little children, help her again to hear, too, the song of doves at dawn, and may she smile again in peace, security and happiness.
