President Voices Hope That America May Stay Out of War

Hyde Park, N. Y.—With a firmness undiminished by the latest phases of Europe's war, President Roosevelt's voice once again Monday a hope that the United States could keep out of the conflict.

Certainly Americans—and he included himself in his statement—were all against war just as they were all against sin, he asserted.

Yet, with the caution with which he always has appraised publicly America's chances of keeping out of the fighting, the Chief Executive did not go so far as to say he believed the nation could remain at peace.

In fact, he went to some pains, at a press conference, to make it plain that he was voicing only a hope, as he has done many times before.

Even so, his words attained a measure of extra significance from the act that some critics had been contending the administration was nudging the country toward active participation in the war and some administration officials had been urging greater and more effective aid for foes of the axis, including use of the navy.

North Carolina People To Make Gift of Mercy Plane To England

Raleigh, June 30. The huge amphibian Grumann ambulance, or mercy plane which thousands inspected on a three day state-wide tour of North Carolina has returned to New York where complete ambulance and hospital equipment will be rapidly installed so that the mercy ship can be rushed to England to begin the work of rescuing crews of combat planes downed at sea, carrying injured civilians in bomb-raided areas on the English Isles. Modern tactics of warfare have made airplane ambulances, unknown in previous wars, an absolute necessity. Without additional mercy planes of the type which the Old North State Fund proposes to present the people of England as a gift of citizens of this state, England will continue to be sorely pressed for facilities to relieve the suffering of civilians and members of her armed forces and thousands will die for the lack of skilled medical aid. The urgency of the need has caused Lord Beaverbrook and other British officials to make a strong appeal to the British-American Ambulance Corps for more ambulance planes to be rushed overseas.

To meet this situation, the Old North State Fund, of which Governor J. M. Broughton is honorary chairman, is rushing preparations for a campaign to raise $75,000 to purchase and deliver a fully equipped mercy ship at the earliest possible moment. It is the hope of the organization's executive committee that North Carolina can be the first state to present the English people with an airplane ambulance as a gift of citizens.

In commenting upon the recent statewide tour, Judge Frederick O. Bowman, state chairman of the fund, declared "After visiting many cities in the state and seeing the great interest and enthusiasm shown by citizens in all sections, we feel convinced that our objective of making a gift of a mercy plane to the people of England will be speedily reached. Everywhere, citizens in all walks of life expressed the willingness to participate in this humanitarian movement which means so much to the British people."
