Hints For Motorists

LEAKS in the rubber hose connections are a frequent cause of the failure of vacuum-type windshield wipers to work properly. An easy way to discover the presence of leaks is to remove the hose, pinch one end closed, hold the hose under water, and blow into the open end. If there are leaks in the hose air bubbles will betray their presence.

Contact of oil and other lubricants with the wiring of the car's electrical system tends to destroy insulation. Keep the motor clean and eliminate this source of short circuits and resulting trouble.
