GENERAL BUTLER.

General Butler has given notice that he will run as the candidate of the Anti Monopoly, an Labor Parties. He will not however write his letter of acceptance till Cleveland's is made public. It looks as though sandwiched in between Blaine and Butler, Cleveland will have hard work to put out a letter that will satisfy his friends and catch votes. Butler wants the last chance at the jury.

YORK AND SCALES.

If the contest were simply a logical discussion of principles,—why, then Mr. York would not be able even to afford entertainment for the audience. But no joint canvass is exclusively a discussion of principles. It must be rather a mixture of such discussions with personal records, and party shortcomings, and jokes and other such matter. It must, in fact, be a series of stump speeches, to suit all sorts of people.

Mr. York has not been a student of political questions. He is not a thoroughly well-informed man, either in law or in politics. But he is a good campaigner among country people. He knows precisely what tone to strike. He knows how to electioneer as a drummer knows how to sell goods. He goes straight forward to get votes. He is a very practical fellow.

On the other hand, although Mr. Scales is one of the very best informed men in public affairs that we have,—an exact and conscientious student and a logical reasoner—he is not a vote-drummer. In a rough-and-tumble mountain campaign, therefore, he would naturally be reputed from his training and experience be at a disadvantage.—[Chronicle.

A GOOD TIME COMING.

He who cares to go beneath the surface of the present aspect of political combinations and make dilligent search for the underlying causes of open revolt in party ranks will be pretty sure to come to the conclusion that "old things are passing away" and new forces are working to bring about grand results to our already prosperous and favored land. Partisan politics is now confined to quite a small area: the field is widened to admit a great economic question that finds a foot hold in every part of our broad land. The issue is forced upon the country by that "Bourbonism" that neither learns nor forgets and we think we can see good to come from it all around. To see the "truly good" of Boston and New-York clamoring for British Free Trade while Virginia the Mother of Presidents and her daughter West of the Mountains, Georgia, Tennessee, Louisiana and the Carolinas are demanding Protection is enough to cheer the heart of those throughout the South who for eighteen years past have stood by the Republican party with a devotion of-time sealed in blood. The time is coming, yea is almost here, when our party will be the recognized party of progress and occupy the respectable position that the old Whig party in its palmy days occupied throughout the South. Blaine and "Protection" will make our grand old party the asylum for the labor and industries of the land while tissue ballots, "red shirt" clubs: the very "Ku Klux" and the later idea of damnably dishonest returns be relegated to the past. Stand by your colors and hope on. There is yet a "God in Israel."

NO LONGER A DEMOCRAT.

BOSTON, July 24.—H. A. Mestall, pastor of the First Unitarian Church at Woburn, Mass., sends the following letter to The Journal:

This seems to be a bolting year in Massachusetts, and especially with clergymen. I call myself a bolter, but unlike some of my ministerial brethren, I do not bolt the Republican nominees or the Republican party—I bolt the Democratic nominees and the Democratic party. During my brief voting career (which extends over only two Presidential terms) I have been quite an ardent Democrat, always supporting the party ticket without any hesitation or mental reservation; and, having taken this step, I cut myself deliberately off from all my antecedents and early associations. I was born and brought up in North Carolina, in the home of Clingman and Vance. I am the son of a "Bourbon" who commanded a battalion in the Confederate army, and who is now the chairman of the Democratic committee of one of the most populous western counties in my native State. I supported Tilden and Hendricks and Hancock and English. But this year I propose to use what little influence I have toward the election of Blaine and Logan. Having investigated Mr. Blaine's official record as thoroughly as I could, I am compelled to admit, despite the force of early prejudice, that he is a brave, honest, patriotic American, and, as such, worthy of the support of every loyal American citizen.

WHERE THE CUT MUST COME.

"We pay off 1,500 men to-morrow," said Mr. Roach, "for the week giving them about $47,000 in all. My material is about ten per cent of the cost of my work; the labor makes the other ninety per cent. If Congress gives us free trade I can't cut much on the material, so you see, gentlemen, where the cut will come."—Ex.

A Woman's View of the Candidate.

TO THE EDITOR—SIR: Ninety-nine women in a hundred will agree that a man whose relations with women will not bear talking about is not a fit man to preside over the 10,000,000 families and the 25,000,000 women and little girls of this republic. Cleveland may be a perfectly honest man in pecuniary matters. But if he be not also a moral man, he ought not to command the vote of a single father of a family. His election would be a direct insult to the wifhood and womanhood of the nation.—[New-York Sun.
