THE coroner's jury in the Hartford hotel explosion case, have, after thorough investigation, come to the conclusion that the disaster was caused by too heavy a pressure on the boiler, the safety-valve being out of order and all outlets to the boiler closed.

TOWN TALK.

Shoe factory. Morehead Banking Company. Extension of the Street Railway. St. Patrick's Day in the morning. Pitch in and push our new enterprises to success.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS.

GOVERNOR FOWLE and staff and Miss Helen seem to be having a big time in Wilmington. It is said the regular schedule on the Durham & Northern Railroad will begin on the 26th—a week from next Tuesday.

—The civil calendar for the March term of Durham Superior Court appears in THE PLANT to-day. Let all interested observe and govern themselves accordingly.

—The telephone call of Mr. W. H. Proctor, of the Racket Grocery, is number twenty-three. Members of the exchange will add Mr. Proctor's name and number to their lists.

—If every reader of THE PLANT was a subscriber, how our bank account would grow. One of our subscribers complained this morning because five or six non-subscribers made a rush for his copy and read it before he got hold of it.

Racket Grocery.

We invite attention to the advertisement of Mr. W. H. Proctor, proprietor of the Racket Grocery, corner of Parrish and Mangum streets, who keeps a large assortment of heavy and fancy groceries and sells them at bottom prices.

Closing Out.

Attention is directed to the attractive advertisement of Sam Lehman's Old Reliable Durham Clothing Hall, in which it is announced that the entire stock is being offered at prime cost, and even below cost, for spot cash.

Continued.

Rhodes Herndon was arraigned before Mayor Christian this morning upon the charge of violating the local option law.

When the case was called Herndon asked for a continuance upon the ground that he did not know there was more than one witness against him.

Of course this ground was insufficient and he changed base and asked for time to employ counsel and summons witnesses in his behalf.

Whereupon the case was postponed until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

At 3 o'clock the case was again called and for a satisfactory reason it was continued until 9 o'clock, Monday morning, at the instance of counsel for the State.

They Mourn His Death.

The Greensboro Patriot, published at Col. Morehead's native town, pays the following tribute to his character:

"Eugene Morehead was the youngest son of the late Governor Morehead, and inherited many of the sterling qualities of his distinguished father. To that sturdy independence of character which commanded the admiration of men, and that spotless integrity which gained for him implicit confidence and respect in the business enterprises where he exerted so potent an influence, he added the rare personal magnetism which knit friends to him as with bands of steel, the culture and refinement which gained for him enthusiastic welcome in the social circle, and the warm, generous heart which made his philanthropy a vital, active principle in his sympathy for his fellowmen."

"When such a man as Eugene Morehead gives up his hold on life, his State mourns the loss of his citizenship, with all its virtue and value to its material prosperity; the loving and the loved weep over the sundering of the precious family tie, and are closeted with the sacredness of their bereavement; but the people of the community in which he was born and reared—the home of his youth and childhood—have watched with pride his development of character, have shared his honors, and they mourn his death with a poignancy but little less than that which drapes the stricken home in mourning."

"Born in this city, the deceased moved to Durham a few years ago, where he has since resided, but he left his impress upon his native town, to endure longer than his own lifetime. Imbued with a progressive public spirit, he put his hand to material enterprises with all the energy of his nature, leading often, and working always with unselfish devotion to the public good; gifted with most pleasing social qualities, his influence was ever refining and salutary—and his departure left this people bereft of a powerful helper and a close warm friend."
