A New Danger.

A great danger threatens the people of the South. An evil that is steadily growing, and which will cause great misery and suffering, is being sold to the people under the name of a medicine. It is called "Simmons' Liver Regulator." Beware! There never has been more than one Simmons' Liver Regulator on the market. Take nothing else. The person who tries to persuade you that anything else is just the same is not to be relied upon, nor is the dealer to be trusted who tries to sell you another article in its stead. You know what Simmons' Liver Regulator is, because it has done you good. Nor don't be deceived into trying anything else. Wait until the Old Friend, Simmons' Liver Regulator, has failed you, then will you be able to try something else. Remember, Simmons' Liver Regulator is what you want. It is put up only by J. H. Zeffin & Co., and a Red Z is on every package.

"Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep."

The fire upon the hearth is low, and there is stillness everywhere. Like troubled spirits, here and there, the twilight shadows flitting and ghostly, and the shadows round me creep. A childish trouble breaks the gloom. And, softly, from a further room comes, "Now I lay me down to sleep."

And, somehow, with that little prayer, and that sweet trouble in my ears, My thought goes back to distant years, and lingers with a dear one there: And, as I hear the child's amen, My mother's faith comes back to me. Crouched at her side I seem to be, And mother holds my hands again.

O for an hour in that dear place! O for the peace of that dear time! O for that childish trust sublime! O for a glimpse of mother's face! Yet, as the shadows round me creep, I do not seem to be alone— Sweet memory of that trouble time— And "now I lay me down to sleep."

—EUGENE FIELD.

Mixed Politics With Religion.

There was an amusing occurrence in Lowesville the other night. Capt. E. W. Ward, the "twisted tail" candidate for the Legislature drove into town and Col. D. A. Lowe invited him to partake of his hospitality, but the candidate said he was looking for a man of his own political faith. The colonel thereupon sent him over to Mr. Withers, the only Republican in the place.

The two Republicans discussed politics in the greatest possible harmony, agreeing perfectly that the Republican party was the greatest party on earth and that they were pulling the wool over the eyes of the Pops, getting all the county candidates and would land them all in the Republican party before the next election, etc.

From politics they passed to a discussion of scriptures, and on this the harmony which had marked their former discussions was split wide open. Their interpretation of certain passages was so radically different that they almost came to blows. Finally Mr. Withers showed the candidate to the door and went to the stable and caught his horse, and ordered him to seek other quarters.

So about ten o'clock Col. Lowe heard a knock at his door and the candidate informed him that he would have to take refuge with him, as his host had ordered him out. The next morning the two would not speak. The moral of this story is, that politicians should stick to politics. They are out of their element when they venture into religious matters.

Attacked by a Bull.

Will Crockett, colored, lives on Mr. Wadsworth's farm west of the city. He is generally employed to drive the milk wagon. Yesterday afternoon he went in the lot to get the horse to put to the wagon, when he was attacked by a young bull which Mr. Wadsworth owns, and came near losing his life. The sight of the man seemed to infuriate the bull, and he made at him.

Crockett ran but the animal struck him in the back, knocked him down, and but for its horns being sawed off, would have gored him to death. As it was, it mashed him with its head and feet, causing the negro terrible pain. But for timely assistance the bull would have probably killed him. After the animal was gotten off him, the negro was picked up and brought to town and Dr. Gibson attended him. The skin was not broken, but he was hurt internally. His injuries are serious, but not fatal.

Barham's Dark Side.

Rumor has it that there was a night carousal in Smoky Hollow, a pistol was fired in one of the houses, and $15 in cash money changed hands not to bring it to light. Who is it implicated, if these rumors are true?

The most cowardly and contemptible act we have yet heard of the Durham "co-operators" doing is to send anonymous letters, of a threatening character, to colored men who they fear will not vote with them. Is this a free country or not? Is that giving the colored man his rights? It is a species of anarchy that no self-respecting colored man should tolerate in voting for such a desperate gang of cowardly intimidators.

Jack the Cheat Killer.

The child's story of "Jack the Cheat Killer," furnished a striking illustration of the efficacy of small agencies towards the suppression of great evils, when judiciously used. The daring exploits of large life Jack remind us, in their results, of the efficacy of small agencies towards the suppression of great evils, when judiciously used. ARR AT A FAIR.

Bill Visits a Georgia County Fair and Tells all About It.

If a man would escape all this hurly-burly of politics let him take an overland trip to some quiet country settlement where there is a camp meeting or a fair going on. I found a place last week that surprised and pleased me. There is a territory about ten miles square down in the corner of Troup, Heard and Coweta counties that seems to loom up a little higher and is a good deal richer than the average land of either county. The old original surveyor who laid off these boundaries would not put all this fine land in a single county, but tried to tote fair with all. He gave Heard the largest share because it needed it. About the center of this territory is a little village called Corinth. Some old Bible reader gave it that name, I reckon, in honor of Paul, who lived and preached in the ancient city and planted churches there and turned them over to Apollus to be watered. This Corinth has no Paul nor Apollus, but it used to have a reputation for its school.

Corinth has just closed her fifth annual fair—a settlement fair that draws the farmers and their families together like a camp meeting. It does not pretend to be a thing, but it costs nothing hardly and the people like it. They brought the best products of their farms, some corn stalks eighteen feet eight inches high and twelve feet to the ear. Wheat and oats and hay, hams and lead and butter, cane syrup and sorghum, potatoes and pumpkins and many kinds of garden seed. A fine display of fowls, some hogs and Jersey cattle. In the woman's department there were some of the same old coverlets and counterpanes and patch-work quilts that we have seen ever since we were boys, and there was some beautiful embroidery work that we didn't see in the long ago. There were all sorts of preserves and jellies and pickles and I counted six kinds of home-made wine, among them was some mappow wine that the judges said was delicious, but they never offered me any.

Some of the old veterans brought their guns and swords and canteens. There was an old battered canteen that was in all the war and had I been such a poet as my friend Lucien Knight I would have written an epilogue to it in verse—

Hail old canteen, the Southern soldier's friend,
While on the march his country to defend,
Close by his side thy shining form was seen,
And none stuck closer than his old canteen,
or words to that effect. And the Italians were there with their monster performing bears. These wandering sons of Italy were 3,000 miles from their home ministering to the pleasure of our children for a mere pittance, but where the bears came from I know not. They danced and pranced to music. They marched and counter-marched and made bows and sat in chairs and wrestled with their keepers and did many funny and fantastic things that amused and entertained us all. The men and the bears sleep together in some outdoor place. They eat together and share a common fortune. The chief difference is that God clothes one and man the other.

When dinner time came the matrons and maidens spread their table cloths upon the ground under the shade of the trees and filled them with good things for the multitude. Everybody was invited everywhere and all were pressed to eat and drink, for spring water and coffee were abundant. I eat chicken and sausage until I didn't know whether to crow or to grunt, and so I did neither. Next came the races—horse races, upon a mile track that was in the shape of the figure eight. It was in a close sheared meadow of bermuda grass. This racing business seems to be quite orthodox with the people, for all the stock is homemade, and there was no jockeying or betting that I discovered. There was some good stock, but none that were kept for the turf. They pulled the plow or the wagon and made the crop. Nobody seemed to time them, the only question was, which beat? Maude S. was not there nor Nancy Hanks. I think there must have been 300 or 400 buggies around that track, and in most of them were young men and maidens. There was no drinking nor swearing and not an accident of any kind.

I met some people I used to know, but had forgotten. One middle-aged gentleman introduced himself by saying: "Major, you do not remember me, but I will refresh your memory. Many years ago when you were living in Rome you was a member of the school board and I was an applicant for a teacher's commission. You were chosen to examine me on arithmetic and when it was your turn you asked me to go to the blackboard and write down eleven thousand seven hundred and eleven, and I bustled, but you let me in." Yes, I remembered then that his name was Duke, and how mortified he was at his failure. My friend Judge Ware

He Used a Crow Bar.

On Tuesday evening, a crowd of hands was working the public road near McGlamery's store, this county, when a dispute arose between Worth Church and Milt McGlamery, two white men. After wrangling some time the former suddenly clinched his side of the question by picking up a crow bar and striking the latter on the back of the head.

It was a very hard blow and rendered McGlamery unconscious for some time, but he finally came around all right and was able to be out the next day. A terrible gash was cut by the blow, but fortunately the skull was not fractured. The "liver regulator" they had taken on seems to have taken effect pretty soon.

Last Week in Trade Circles.

Special Correspondence.

NEW YORK, Oct. 29, 1894.

Business during the past week has shown well sustained activity in some departments, and less in others. The industrial revival has made encouraging progress. The boot and shoe factories are crowded with orders, and of the cheaper grades of goods production are sold from one to three months ahead. Shipments from Eastern centres are larger than at the corresponding period in either of the two preceding years. Production of textile fabrics and the output of iron and steel continue to increase. The distribution of some lines of goods from first hands has fallen off a little, owing to the advanced stage of the season, and on account also of the retardation of consumption by mild weather. The fall in cotton prices has unfavorably affected business and restricted credits in some parts of the South, although most of the reports from that section take a hopeful view of the business situation.

The backward season, low prices for agricultural products and the increasing political excitement in many States fully account for the slight shrinkage in the volume of business disclosed by the returns of bank clearings. Railroad earnings in October have decreased 3.8 per cent., but the decline is attributable to the fact that current comparisons are with the period last year when the World's Fair passenger business was at its height. There has been no renewal of gold exports. Merchandise imports at New York so far this month have increased $3,433,808, or about 16 per cent. from the comparatively small totals for three weeks of October last year. Exports, on the other hand, have declined $2,329,674, or a little over 10 per cent., which is due chiefly to lower prices of wheat, cotton and provisions. Business failures in the United States and Canada during the past week numbered 253, as against 336 for the corresponding week last year. Returns to R. G. Dun & Co., for three weeks of October show aggregate liabilities of only $5,639,741, of which $2,629,671 were of manufacturing and $2,959,567 of trading concerns.

Cotton prices have further declined 1 cent per pound, as a result of the continued large crop movement from the plantations and weather conditions favorable to the realization of maximum estimates of the yield. While demand has been moderate in proportion to the offerings, the exports have increased, and takings by Northern mills so far during the season have been more than double what they were last year and about 30 per cent. larger than they were in the corresponding period of 1892. New business in cotton goods has been comparatively quiet. There has been a fairly large distribution on account of back orders; but the season for retail trade has been backward, and the stocks of jobbers have not been sufficiently depleted to call for general replenishment. Prices of cotton goods show a little change, but the market lacks strength, owing to the abnormal price depression in the raw cotton trade.

Fluctuations in wheat and corn prices have been within narrow limits, and the net changes for the week are unimportant, except at New York, where a speculative short interest has caused 21 cents advance in the price of the October option of corn. The interior movement of wheat has continued small in winter grain districts, but comparatively large in the Northwest; and a further enlargement of visible stocks has prevented any accession of speculative confidence in the markets. There has been no activity in the export trade. Inquiry from foreign buyers has been faint, but the volume of new business has been restricted by a hardening market for ocean freight room, which has found more profitable employment through an expansion of the general cargo business. Much of the recent outward movement of wheat was stimulated by the acceptance of ballast freight rates by the ocean liners.

Some of the reports concerning the yield of corn are disappointing; but as a rule the crop returns point to more satisfactory results than had been anticipated. There is practically no present movement of corn for export, and as yet little business has been done in new crop for future clearance. There have been larger shipments of hogs to Western packing centres; and prices have generally declined 25 to 30 cents per 100 pounds. The increased output and the cheapening of hogs have combined to depress prices of products and Chicago quotations are lower than they were a week ago by 25 cents per barrel on pork and 30 cents per 100 pounds on lard.

Functional derangements or organic troubles, they take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. No woman should keep for long back. For sale by J. H. Hill & Son, druggists.

Two ginhouses near Hamilton, containing twenty-five bales of cotton in all, were destroyed by fire Friday. Both gins were at work at the time, and it is supposed to have caught from matches being carelessly left in the cotton by the pickers.

John E. Brothers, the Democratic registrar of Salen township, Pasquotank county, for refusing to allow a Republican ex-Sheriff named James S. Wilcox, to examine the registration books, was shot by the latter, Monday, and died the next day.

The Morganton Herald says Mr. John Campbell, of Burke, raised 1,200 bushels of sweet potatoes on six acres. The Deaf and Dumb School raised 600 bushels on two acres. The State Hospital has not yet been heard from, but will raise between 1,500 and 2,000 bushels.

A half-witted negro, who was employed as a waiter in a restaurant at Reidsville, was sent to the home of an aged white lady, Friday, on an errand. Finding her in the house alone, he suddenly seized and attempted to assault her. Her screams brought help and the negro fled. An alarm was given, the negro was captured and jailed.

CATARHAL DYSPEPSIA.

A Discouraged Invalid Restored to Health and Happiness.

Catarh of the stomach causes a condition known as dyspepsia or indigestion. It usually results from catarrh in the throat, but sometimes occurs in people who have never had catarrh elsewhere. The symptoms of dyspepsia are: liver complaint, biliousness, sour stomach, water-brash, bloating after eating, constipation, piles, and, in many cases, low spirits, dizziness, sympathetic heart palpitation, pain, indigestion, and looseness of the bowels. Pe-runa and Man-a-lin, taken according to directions on the bottle, will cure every one. The following is a specimen of the letters received from patients:

O. S. McQuillan, Spring Hill, Ia., writes: "Four years ago last fall my stomach, without any previous warning, refused to perform its functions, and I soon lost strength. During this time food was forced through my stomach by using cathartics. With flesh wasted away, strength exhausted so that it took all my energy to even get into a bath tub, hopes all gone, I began to take Pe-runa, following free advice which Dr. Hartman gave me. In a short time I could eat nourishing food, and the piles, kidney trouble and constipation disappeared. Flesh, strength, and a splendid appetite returned, and I went to work."

For treatment on catarrh, coughs, colds, consumption, and all climatic diseases of winter, send for Family Physician No. 2. Address The Pe-runa Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio.
