Slop Coughing

Every cough makes your throat more raw and irritable. Every cough congests the lining membrane of your lungs. Cease tearing your throat and lungs in this way. Put the parts at rest and give them a chance to heal. You will need some help to do this, and you will find it in

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

From the first dose the quiet and rest begin; the tickling in the throat ceases; the spasm weakens; the cough disappears. Do not wait for pneumonia and consumption but cut short your cold without delay.

Dr. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral should be over the lungs of every person troubled with a cough.

What is Life?

A worthless stone sinks in the sea. So sinks a gem of sparkling light. A moment's ripple there will be. Then all is lost from sight.

The mendicant and millionaire. The sober man and sensualist. The mother and her child at prayer. Here yesterday, are not.

The world moves on just as of old. Men work and war, and children play. Kings eat and fatten, and misers gold. And women weep and pray.

But God knows where is hid the gem. Where all his precious jewels sleep. And on some day will gather them. From tomb and grave and deep.

Curiosity.

Men, as well as some of the lower animals, suffer from what is sometimes fatal curiosity. Hunters of wild animals have various devices by which they excite the curiosity of deer, ducks and other game and lure them to death. Hunters of men act on precisely the same principle, and the human animal does not differ greatly from the innocent moose, who, seeing something out of the ordinary, approaches to learn what it is.

The long suffering of the human race is attributed to curiosity, and it has been the fruitful cause of sin and suffering for centuries. Well directed curiosity leads, on the other hand, to an increase of useful knowledge. The desire to investigate the forces of nature leads to discovery and invention; curiosity on the part of children promotes the acquisition of knowledge, but curiosity to be beneficial must be directed to proper channels.

Curiosity respecting forbidden things, such as vice, is extremely dangerous. One may begin his researches with the purest and best of motives, but vice, familiar grown, becomes tolerable, and may in the end master the curious investigator. Passion may get the better of reason, under strong temptation, and one who thought to view vice from the outside is inspired by his passions to seek an experience that can be gained only by personal indulgence. For this reason, among others, it has been found desirable to forestall curiosity in the young by teaching them all that they should know about the weaknesses of humanity, instead of leaving them to gain such knowledge by themselves. The doctrine of heredity has suffered by conspicuous exceptions to its rules, mainly because the effects of curiosity, or its absence, have not been taken into account.

The child of strictly virtuous and respectable parents goes astray sometimes because of unsatisfied curiosity. Knowledge is withheld from him that ought to have been imparted, and he falls, while seeking it, unguided and unguarded. On the other hand, the child of vicious parents may reject their example. The outer world has nothing to teach him in the way of vice. He learns at an early age all that can be taught, and hence does not become the victim of an unhealthy curiosity. He may not be virtuous and respectable from high motives, but because he has noted in time the evil effects of vice, and is not to be allured by its false promises. Recognizing the potential force of curiosity for good or evil, it is important that the curiosity of children should be, in a measure, satisfied and directed into the right channels. Children, as a rule, are of an inquiring turn of mind, and, except in rare instances, have plastic minds. They can be interested in studies and researches that will be beneficial to them just as easily as they can be interested in forms of vicious entertainment. The important thing to do is to give proper direction to their activities, and this should be done at a very early age.

Ordinarily parents do not give much thought to the future of their children until the latter have attained the age of 14 or 16 years, yet, before this age, the children's habits of thought may have been formed. One is a book worm, another is interested in sports, still another is an idler, easily led away by bad associates. It is an easy matter to keep the good boy in the right path, but it is exceedingly difficult to reform the one who has gone wrong. Curiosity guides them all, but in very different directions, and the aim of parents and guardians should be to arouse in the very young a curiosity respecting good or, at least, harmless things, to the exclusion of curiosity about the things which are vicious in their influences. Thus may the curiosity of childhood, so pernicious at times when left unguided, be turned into proper channels and made helpful to them.

A good character is more easily lost than gained.

Chamberlain's Pain Balm Cures Others. Why Not You?

My wife has been using Chamberlain's Pain Balm, with good results, for a lame shoulder that has pained her continually for nine years. We have tried all kinds of medicines and doctors without receiving any benefit from any of them. One day we saw an advertisement of this medicine and thought of trying it, which we did with the best of satisfaction. She has used only one bottle and her shoulder is almost well—APOLLYN L. AS BAD AS ANANIAS

Are Some Men, Says Bill Arp, the Georgia Philosopher.

"Honesty is the best policy," said Ben Franklin, and Richard Whately, the great theologian, added, "But he who acts on that principle is not an honest man."

The truth is, that real, genuine honesty is not a policy at all, for policy requires thought, plan and generally some dissimulation. It comes from the head, the brain; whereas honesty is a moral principle that comes from the heart, and takes no time for thought. Policy is a cold, hard word; honesty a warm, genial, neighborly one. The poets like it next best to love—Hearn says, "It's good to be honest and true," and Pope says "An honest man's the noblest work of God." The best definition of the word is, "free from deceit, just in speech and action, fair in dealing and worthy to be trusted."

I was ruminating about this because a clever country boy from whom I buy my lightwood brought me a load to-day and the top layers and all that was in sight were rich in resin and clean and attractive. He wanted a dollar and a half, and I told him it was too much; but he pleaded like a lawyer, and said he had hauled it ten miles, and that kind of pine was getting awful scarce; that he could have sold it down town, but knew that I liked rich, clean split pine, and so he brought it to me. He is a good-looking, hard-working boy, and so I bought it and stood by while he took it off. The top was all right, but that out of sight was black knots or half-rotten pieces, and disgusted me. "Look here, Felton," said I, "do you know of a boy who would put his best pine in the bottom of the wagon, or who would even mix it about half and half?" "No, sir, I don't," said he; "we haven't got any of that sort in the pine woods."

"Don't you know," said I, "that I would have given you your price if I had seen into the bottom of your wagon?" He smiled complacently, and replied: "That's just the reason we put the best on top; we couldn't get more'n half price if we didn't, and you know, major, we get mighty little for a hard day's work, anyhow."

"But, Felton, that way of doing is cheating, and they say that cheating never thrives. I should think you would feel ashamed to throw your load off right here before me."

"Well, now, major, to tell you the truth, I was in hopes you would go in the house before I throwed it off; but everybody has to put the best on top, and he smiled all over his face."

What kind of a boy is that? Well, he is a little better than the average of boys, or of men either, as to that, for he smiles at you while he deceives you. I heard a blind phrenologist tell a man once that his bump of covetousness was so large he would steal if he had a fair chance—that is, if he found a man asleep with his pocketbook under his pillow he would take it, but at the same time he had sympathy so largely developed that he would kiss his sleeping victim before he left him. I like that boy for his good nature, and had rather he would cheat me than a boy who would own up to anything, and go off and brag how he got me. Yes, everybody puts the best on top, and everybody tries to get the advantage in a trade—not everybody, but the exceptions are very few. A man can tell a lie by concealing the truth—when I was a lad I heard old Dr. Nathan Hoyt, of Athens, preach a sermon in our town, and have not forgotten how he looked straight at me and said: "Little boy, you can tell a lie by winking your eye."

My wife says she was in a store one day when a country woman came in and asked the merchant if he could match that scrap of gingham which she showed him. He said no, but he had something very like it, and prettier, and he finally sold it to her. After she left, my wife remarked that she might have matched it at the next door, for she noticed the identical goods in the window as she passed. "Yes, I knew it," said the merchant, "but it wasn't my business to tell her; I must sell my own goods if I can." That was the kind of honesty that was policy, but it was not fair or neighborly—it was done as you would be done by. The trading world is very busy concealing the truth. I bought a fine sow from a neighbor once, and she eat up a dozen chickens the day I got her. When I asked him why he didn't tell me that she was a chicken eater, he smiled and said he thought I would find it out soon enough. A merchant may know that a certain piece of prints will fade when washed, but he does not tell it. You can hardly find a real linen bosom shirt nowadays, but they are all sold for linen. These are not frauds of much consequence, but they illustrate the Scripture, which saith "A lie sticketh close in the joints between buyer and seller," and "It is naught—it is naught—saith the buyer, but he goeth his way and rejoiceth." That was in a horse trade, I reckon.

NATIONAL CAPITAL MATTERS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14, 1899.

"A Bryan triumph" is what nearly every democrat and many republicans see in the results of the State elections, and it is not likely that there will be any more serious talk of anybody else for the head of the democratic ticket, next year. Col. Bryan's magnificent success in his own State, where he largely increased the fusion majority in the face of many obstacles, including the influence of the Federal administration and the lavish expenditure of money by the republicans, aroused admiration among his opponents.

Boss Hanna's success in Ohio, probably the most costly campaign ever carried on in a single State, is accepted as having knocked the bottom out of all the schemes to spring an anti-McKinley candidate on the republicans, and, unless something of a scandalous nature should be fastened upon his administration between now and the meeting of the republican national convention, Mr. McKinley will not be opposed for renomination; but a strong element in the republican party, including many of its most prominent men in Congress, have already begun to demand of Mr. McKinley that he depose King Hanna before the Presidential campaign opens. That will not be an easy job, as Hanna has as much justification in claiming his dearly paid victory in Ohio as a personal vindication as Mr. McKinley has in claiming it as an endorsement of imperialism by the country.

Imperialism run mad may be looked for in future acts of the administration, as Mr. McKinley and all his cabinet have succeeded in persuading themselves into believing that the State elections were an endorsement of imperialism by the people, notwithstanding the anti-imperialist victories in Nebraska, and in Maryland. The result in Ohio was not an endorsement of anything except the power of money corruptly spent.

Owing to the large number of Maryland democrats engaged in business in Washington there has been unusual rejoicing at the National capital on account of the return of that State to the democratic fold, from which it would never have strayed had there not been a bitter family row in the democratic camp. Maryland democrats are very positive in saying that they can keep the State in line now that the party is again united.

Now that there is no campaign to influence, it is admitted by members of the administration that the movement to capture Aguinaldo and his army, which it was officially announced the day before election could not possibly fail, has met with delays which it is feared will give Aguinaldo time enough to get away.

Gen. Joe Wheeler has written that he will take his seat in the House during the coming session of Congress, but as he has not left Manila yet, so far as known in Washington, and it will take between six and eight weeks for him to make the trip, he cannot be at the opening of Congress. Constitutional experts say that should Gen. Wheeler appear in the House to take the oath his status would be entirely different to that occupied by him when objection was raised to his resuming his seat in the House while holding the commission of a major general of volunteers, on the ground that his acceptance of a commission in the army vacated his seat in the House, an objection which was sustained by the committee of which Speaker-to-be Henderson was chairman, and which would have been sustained by the House had not the personal popularity of Gen. Wheeler been so great that House declined to consider the report on the plea that there was not time enough, owing to the nearness of the end of the session, when Gen. Wheeler's present commission—brigadier general of volunteers—was given him he was not a member of the House, although he had been elected as such. Consequently no objection will be made to his being sworn in as a member whenever he presents himself, but the moment he takes the oath as a member of the House he will cease to be a brigadier general.

Secretary Gage says he thinks the State elections were an order to the republicans in Congress to put the single gold standard into a law. Democrats only hope that he will be able to convince the republican leaders in Congress to think the same way.

The Agricultural reports show great satisfaction with the government's experiments with tea raising in South Carolina and tobacco raising on the frost bitten orange orchards of Florida. The latter is equal to Cuba's best production.

Postmaster General Smith, has sent a notice to postmasters asking them to, in some feasible way, call the attention of their patrons to the necessity of putting the names of the Company, Regiment, etc., on the mail addressed to soldiers at Manila. Hundreds of letters lie undelivered on this account.

A special to the Asheville Citizen says a fight occurred Tuesday at Black Mountain between Milt Hamby and Lawson Dougherty, in which both parties were seriously injured. Dougherty was dangerously cut about the throat and neck. Hamby received two shots, one in the hip and one in the arm.

At last the Southeastern Tariff Association has decided to reduce insurance rates in North Carolina. This reduction, which is about 25 per cent, below the old rate, is made in recognition of the new insurance laws of North Carolina, which have been very beneficial to the companies doing business in the State.

A Laurinburg special to the Raleigh News and Observer says a fatal shooting affray occurred on the plantation of Mr. Duncan Sutherland, a few miles from town, Sunday night, the parties all being colored. One man is dead, another mortally wounded and a third more or less injured. A woman was at the bottom of the whole trouble.
