HOTEL BRUNSWICK,

MADISON AV. AND 89TH ST. NEW YORK CITY.

For Sale.

Desiring to change my occupation I offer for sale my plantation containing 800 acres, 175 cleared and in a good state of cultivation. Productive of cotton, tobacco and all small crops. Good dwelling, 3 tobacco barns, necessary out buildings and tenant cottages. First rate orchard, 2 large well equipped grape vines. Healthy locality, 15 miles from Seven Springs. Terms easy.

The Kiss at the Door.

In the days of the lance and the spur, When the hero went forth to the fight, Oft he carried a token from her, Whom he worshipped as lover and knight.

And when fierce surged the battle around, And when close pressed the merciless foe, 'Twas the token that drove off despair And gave victory's strength to his brow.

Not a hero of knightly olden time, But a warrior in industry's strife, Where the lance that I wield is my pen, And the lady I serve is my wife, Yet a token I carry each day.

Full as precious as any of yore, And it stunts my heart for the fray— 'Tis my love's morning kiss at the door.

Things Rather Than Words.

When Stephen Girard was preparing his plans for the organization of Girard College he set down as one of his wishes that the orphans who were to be the beneficiaries of his bounty should be taught "things rather than words."

He was not an educator, but he had large experience as a merchant and shipper and had had occasion to employ a great number of young men, some illiterate, others highly educated, and he had come to the conclusion that much of the education of the day was misdirected. It was for that reason that he desired the pupils of his school to be taught "things rather than words."

The systems and methods of instruction now most in vogue in the public schools of the United States are based upon Girard's prescription.

They are not applied, perhaps, as he would have applied them, but the schools of to-day give more attention to things and less attention to mere words. That they do not altogether succeed in realizing Girard's aspiration is due to the fact that many of the teachers have been brought up on words and do not know much about things. Another generation will no doubt show some improvement. In science teaching, which is relatively a new study for the pupils of the public schools, the difference between the old and the new systems is most clearly shown.

In Girard's time such science as was taught was memorized from books; in the present day the aim, at least, though it is seldom realized, is to make the pupil observe and think for himself. In the one case he is taught words; in the other things. It is comparatively easy matter to teach words from a textbook. The pupil is required to memorize and the only duty of the teacher is to "hear the lesson" and see that the pupil recites according to the book. But if the pupil is to be taught things rather than words the teacher must know enough to guide and direct the observation of the pupil; he must be capable of directing the latter to right conclusions respecting the observations made, he must be a master of his subject and himself have a knowledge of things rather than words. Such teachers are not the easily found and will not be until the system has been used for many years. That it is the true system of education every successful business man knows, not only from his personal experience, but from his dealings with book-educated men. The man who, in or out of school, has acquired a knowledge of things is useful as an employee; the man who knows nothing except what is taught in books and that only by rote, is impracticable.

To freshen the life of the schools it would seem to be desirable that the teachers themselves instead of passing at once from a normal school to the teacher's chair should be required to serve a term in a business office, where they would add to their knowledge of words a knowledge of things, and more especially a knowledge of business methods, which are in general quite different from those set down in the books. Stephen Girard did not pretend to be a pedagogue, but when he demanded that the boys of the college to be founded in his name should be taught "things rather than words" he set the keynote of the educational method adopted long after his death.

Never decide upon all you may see, for he who decides upon all that he sees often decides on more than he sees.

ARPS DOG IS DEAD.

Bill Laments the Demise of His Faithful and Intelligent Canine.

Old Laddie is dead. Our good old dog, we never shall see him more. He died last Sunday at 1 o'clock; we buried him at 4.

Laddie was seventeen years old. We raised him from puppyhood to doghood, and all those years he seemed like one of the family. He loved us all and we loved him, for he was affectionate good mannered, dignified, courageous and very handsome. He never sought a fight with another dog, but never declined one and always came off the victor.

His face and neck and feet and part of his tail were white; his hair long and glossy and his eyes were amber or rather a brilliant yellow sapphire. In truth, he was a very handsome dog and came from well-bred stock, his grand sire having been sold for $500 in Montgomery. He was known as a shepherd dog—a Scotch collie—and knew his duties and qualities by instinct and inheritance.

We did not have to train him to go after the sheep or the cattle and bring them home. When I left the farm and moved to town he seemed lost and unhappy for awhile, but soon adapted himself to the little grandchildren and followed them around and during his last illness, when he could not walk, it would please him for me to lift him up to the sandbed, where the children were playing. The smaller the children the stronger his love for them. They were the sheep and he was the good shepherd.

We did not send his carcass to the potter's field. I dug a shallow grave down in the corner of the garden, then lifted his dead body gently into the wheelbarrow and rolled it to the place. The wheelbarrow was the horse. I was the horse and five of the grandchildren were the escort. When all was ready my wife and daughters came down to the funeral and we buried Laddie and mounded up his grave and placed a board with his name and age upon it at the head and another at the foot. The little children picked some green asparagus nearby and some Texas pink and roses and slowly and sadly we went away as mourners. Dogs have a curious and interesting history. In ancient times they were under the ban of Jewish contempt and were pronounced and denounced as unclean by the Mosaic law. Not a good word is said of them in all scripture. "The price of a dog is an abomination to the Lord," saith Moses. Job saith: "I disdained to set their fathers with the dogs of my flock." "Am I a dog?" "Beware of dogs." "For without ar dogs and scorpions and idolaters and murderers and whose ever loveth and maketh a lie."

But our good old dog is dead and we all miss him. Nobody ever struck him a lick, or had to say a cross word to him. He was a dog, but he was a gentleman in all his deportment. I wonder where I can get a good young dog to raise to take his place. The winter is coming on and as soon as the chicken thieves find out that Laddie is dead they will come prowling around. Higher education has stopped the niggers from stealing chickens.

Queerest of All Tombs.

In the old graveyard at Charleston, S. C., stands among the stately marble monuments an old cedar bedstead, on one of the side boards of which is cut the inscription, "Mary Ann Luyten, died September 9, 1770, in the 27th year of her age."

More than a hundred years the old bedstead has resisted the attacks of the weather and its good condition to-day is a testimonial to the skill and honesty of its maker, who was also the husband of the woman over whose grave it stands. William Luyten was a cabinetmaker, who came over from England in 1750. He prospered in his new home and fell in love with the beautiful Mary Ann Brewster, who loved him in return. Three days before the day set for the wedding Miss Brewster was thrown from her horse and made a paralyzed cripple for life. Luyten insisted, however, that they should be married, though there was no possibility that his bride would ever be able to rise from her bed. For nine years she lingered, and before she died asked that the red cedar bed, which he had made and which she had so long occupied, should be placed above her grave.

It happened in a Drug Store.
"One day last winter a lady came to my drug store and asked for a brand of cough medicine that I did not have in stock," says Mr. R. Grandin, the popular druggist of Ontario, N. Y. "She was disappointed and wanted to know what cough preparation I could recommend. I said for her that I could freely recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and that she could take a bottle of the remedy and after giving it a fair trial if she did not find it worth the price she would return the bottle and I would refund the price paid. In the course of a day or two the young lady came back in company with a friend in need of a cough medicine and advised her to buy a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. I consider that a very good recommendation for the remedy." It is for sale by M. E. Robinson & Bro., J. F. Miller's drug store, Goldsboro; J. R. Smith, Mount Olive.

Last Week in Trade Circles.

NEW YORK, Oct. 23, 1900.
Within conservative limits there has been a fairly satisfactory volume of general business during the past week, but, as was to have been expected with the great coal strike still unsettled and important elections near at hand, there has been a continued absence of activity in practically all branches of trade.

Although old stock of coal and moderate weather have thus far minimized the business disturbance and the inconvenience to consumers resulting from the enforced shut-down of the collieries, the danger of a coal famine will become more serious with each day's prolongation of the strike, and there is an earnest public desire for a speedy adjustment of the differences which still delay its settlement. Other industries are fairly employed, although productive capacity in most of them is being taxed to its limit. Speculation lags in all directions. The price tendency has continued downward on cotton, breadstuffs and hog products; but there have been few changes in values of manufactured goods.

Business failures during the past week, according to R. G. Dun & Co., numbered 209 in the United States and 26 in Canada, against 145 in this country and 20 in Canada during the corresponding week last year.

Cotton prices have continued to tend sharply downward, and show a net decline for the week of 11-16 of a cent per pound in New York and the equivalent of 1/4 of a cent per pound in Liverpool. The price depression has been due to large receipts, generally favorable weather for the crop and a tendency among factors to place reliance upon increased crop estimates. The prospect of a larger yield than had been expected a few weeks ago and the likelihood of a considerable decrease in consumption as the result of the comparatively high cost of raw material and the stoppage of trade with China have greatly modified the bullish views of speculators. Exports of the staple have been on a liberal scale and considerably in excess of the shipments for the corresponding week last year. While the fall in cotton prices has improved the situation for manufacturers whose selling prices had been unprofitable on the basis of the previous extreme cost of the raw staple, there has been little change in the attitude of sellers of cotton goods. Most makers have shown continued reserve about commitments for the future, and in some cases prices for immediate delivery have been further advanced 1/2 to 1/4 of a cent per yard. The business of the week, however, has been only moderate, as buyers have been encouraged by developments in the cotton markets to pursue a waiting policy, for which additional incentive has been found in the nearness of the elections.

Weather conditions in the West have been more favorable for the drying, husking and cribbing of the new corn, and the favorable progress of the work of getting the new grain ready for market has had a tendency to increase the urgency of sellers on holding of old corn.

ALL OVER THE STATE.

A Summary of Current Events for the Past Seven Days.

Three prisoners made good their escape from the Fayetteville county jail, Thursday night.

The ministers of Charlotte passed strong resolutions against the location of a $300,000 brewery in that city.

Asheville has been selected as the next place of meeting of the National Association of Passenger Agents in October, 1901.

At Sanford, Monday afternoon, J. P. Scott, acting policeman, shot and killed Kinnie McIver, aged 25, who resided near there, for resisting arrest.

The furniture manufacturers of this State organized at Raleigh, Friday, to be known as the North Carolina Furniture Manufacturers' Association. The object of this is for mutual protection.

Emma Brooks, a colored woman on the farm of Lam Lawrence, in Edgecombe county, Monday, locked her 1-year-old child in the house and went off. The house caught fire and the little one was burned to death.

Burglars entered the store of S. S. Mauney, at Cherryville, Gaston county, by prying the door open with a pick Tuesday night, blew open the safe, took out $400 in cash and all the land notes and mortgages belonging to Mr. Mauney.

Maj. Matt. W. Peterson, of Clinton, died at Los Animas, Cuba, of yellow fever Wednesday morning. His wife, who arrived there Monday from Cincinnati to nurse him, shot herself in the head with a revolver one hour after the major's death and died instantly.

Mrs. Nellie Shepherd, aged 70, who lived alone in Guilford county, was found Monday morning by neighbors burned to death in her own house. It is believed that Mrs. Shepherd was sitting near the fire and was attacked by an epileptic fit. No foul play is suspected.

On account of labor troubles in the cotton mills in Alamance county, from 2,000 to 3,000 operatives have been thrown out of employment. The mills have refused to employ operatives belonging to a labor union and a great majority quit work rather than submit to the regulation.

T. C. Harville, a prominent farmer, living near Reidsville, met with a serious accident while in town on last Tuesday night. Mr. Harville fell from the second-story window of C. F. Lewis' residence, and injured himself so severely that physicians offer no hope of his recovery. He is about 60 years old.

The State Auditor reports that the number of State Confederate pensioners has passed the six thousand mark, being now 6,072, an increase of 180 over last year. The pension fund available this year is $113,000. Widows and fourth-class pensioners get $14.50 annually; third class, $20; second class, $49.50; first class, $58. Last year the fund had $5,000 from the land grant fund, which this year it does not get, so it is smaller than last year.

THE WHOLE SYSTEM

May Become Invaded by Cataract-General Lewis' Case.

Hon. James Lewis, Surgeor General of Louisiana.

Per-una Drug Mfg. Co., Columbus, O.: "Gentlemen—I have used Per-una for a short time and can cheerfully recommend it as being all you represent and wish every man who is suffering with cataract could know of its great value. Should I at any future time have occasion to recommend a treatment of your kind, rest assured that yours will be the one, James Lewis."

Wherever the cataract is, there is sure to be a waste of mucus. The mucus is as precious as blood. It is blood, in fact. It is blood plasma—blood with the corpuscles removed. To stop this waste, you must stop the cataract. A course of treatment with Per-una never fails to do this.

Sent for free cataract book. Address The Per-una Drug Manufacturing Co., Columbus, O.
