Mr. Carlisle Now and Mr. Carlisle Then.

The Atlanta Constitution of the 21st inst. has the following to say on Secretary Carlisle's sound money speech of the 20th:

The Constitution publishes elsewhere Mr. Carlisle's speech delivered in Covington, Ky, last night. It speaks for itself.

. We published Sunday before last the full text of Mr. Carlisle's famous speech delivered in Congress in 1878 in which he declared in favor of the unlimited coinage of silver, and only qualified his opposition to free coinage by the state ment that the owners of all bullion whether gold or silver, should pay the cost of nfintage-a most reasonable state-

It was in this famous speech that Mr

Carliste said: *I shall not now enter into an examina tion of the causes which have combined to depreciate the relative value and to appreciate the value of gold since 187. but I am one of those who believe that they are transient and temporary in their nature, and that when they have passed away or been removed by the separate or united action of the nations most deeply interested in the subject the old ratio of actual and relative value will be re-established on a firmer foundation than ever. I know that the world's stock of the precious metals is none too large, and I see no reason to apprehend that it will ever become so. Mankind will be fortunate, indeed, if the annual production of gold and silver coin shall keep pace with the annual increase of population, commerce and industry. According to my vi w of the subject the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy, by legislation and otherwise, from three sevenths to one balt of the metallic money of the world is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age.

The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilences and famines that ever occurred in the history of the world. The absolute and instantaneous destruction of half the entire movable property of the world, including houses, ships, rail-roads, and all other appliances for carrying on commerce, while it would be felt more sensibly at the moment, would not produce anything like the prolonged distress and disorganization of society that must inevitably result from the permanent annihilation of one half of the metallic money in the world. With an ample currency, an industrious and frugal people will speedily rebuild their work of international improvement and repair losses of property, but no amount of industry or economy on the part of the people can create money. When the government creates it, or authorizes it, the citizen may acquire it, but he can do nothing more.
