The New York Journal paid $100 for a white man, well educated, who in great desperation sold himself. The Journal put this "accomplished" but greatly distressed citizen to a work in the streets of New York—to hunt up those who were in a worse condition than he was, and that is now the occupation of this white slave. The poor, gifted fellow had in vain sought work. He found 177,000 destitute people in the great city. This is an awful picture and shows that a return of prosperity in fast and not in newspapers is a very great thing to be desired. It is also said that in Chicago there are 70,000 designation. If therefore, the report is The New York Journal paid $100 for
