Many a boy in college spend very much less than what is best for him to spend. Yet, it is far better for him to come to college and to be economical-economical even to the danger point of suffering and of decency-than not to come at all. Not a few boys also come to college who spend very much more than twice the expense for the three fundamental elements of tuition, room and board. The larger number of boys of lavish expenditures are gravely injured through began to get better, and after using these extravagances. Upon this basis which I have indicated one can go to excellent colleges upon sums not exceeding $530 and receive the largest benefits. One can go to certain colleges and be obliged to spend at the very least $350; one can get a first class education at certain colleges, too, for as small a sum as $200; but the basis I have indicated contains the essential elements for making a judgment .-April Review of Reviews.
