LOCKED IN AN ICE FIELD

The Steamer Monte Rosa's Voyage from Dundee -- Hurricanes and Snow Squalls.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—The Dundee steamer Monte Rosa came into this port yesterday after a stormy passage of twenty-one days from Dundee. The steamer experienced a succession of gales, hurricanes and snow squalls.

At two o'clock on the morning of February 18 the Monte Rosa was off the northeast coast of Newfoundland. The snow flew in whirling gusts and a moderate gale was blowing from the southeast. The lookout reported ice on the port bow, but before the crew were aware the steamer had cut its way into a tremendous ice field. Captain Thomas took his bearings and found he was in latitude 49 degrees north. The steamer lay to until daylight. Nothing could be seen in the morning but ice as far as the eye could reach. The ice was snow covered and dotted here and there by huge icebergs rising to the height of fifty feet or more. The steamer followed a narrow opening to the southeast for thirty miles, when an opening was seen leading southwest. This was followed for fifteen miles, when the ice closed completely around the vessel. The ship floated with the ice for some time, when it again broke up, and the steamer threaded her way out of the dangerous field. The Monte Rosa held her course to the southward until four o'clock in the afternoon of February 20, but on steaming to the westward the ice again appeared. The vessel managed to escape it by skirting the southern edge of the field, Captain Thomas says that the ice extended northward for miles, and that in the open water he passed a number of huge bergs The steamer is not in any way injur-

LAST DAYS OF THE SES-SION.

Matters that will be Considered Under Pressure.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—During the days and nights of the fraction of a week remaining to the present session of Congress the Senate will give instant attention to conference reports and general appropriation bills whenever any of them shall make their appearance, and every effort will be put forth to finish the necessary legislation before next Friday

Members of the Appropriations Committee, upon whom the hardest work devolves, are divided in opinion respecting their ability and that of the Senate to creditably accomplish all that is expected, but the majority hope that, barring accidents and wilful acts of obstruction, it may still be found possible to avoid the necessity for a called session of the Fiftieth Congress.

WILD WEST" SHIPBOARD.

A Steamship Chartered to Carry Buffalo Bill's Show to London.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—Buffala Bill and his manager, Nate Salsbury, have been doing a great deal of thinking during the last few months as to the best manner of transporting "The Wild West" show to Euried Fruits-Blackberries. 6 1-2 rope. They have tried to get space an objection among the steamship men to taking Indians for passengers, as they seem to think that sea-sickness might result in making them very dangerous creatures.

Anyhow, the ocean transportation of Indians is a novelty and they have not cared to risk it. For this reason it has been necessary to charter an entire steamship for the purpose. This was done yesterday by Mr. Saulsbury. He has secured the steamship Nebraska of the State line.

tween March 25 and April 1. "We will not require all of the cabins," said Mr. Saulsbury yesterday, "and a number of theatrical people have written to me to save them berths, as they think the voyage will be an ideal one. It is certain that there has never been one like it before. I, myself, do not expect very much trouble; but there seems to be an impression that the Indians will not be able to stand sea-sicknesss as well as the white man; yet I know of no reason why they should not. Anyhow, it will be very funny to watch them, and they themselves rather dread the trip. We shall go direct to London.

NATIONAL CAPITAL.

The Veto-The Treasury Appointee -Mail Service-Department of Agriculture, &c.

Correspondence of the NEWS. WASHINGTON, D. C., FEB. 28, 1887

The vote in the House on Thursday by which the President's veto of the Dependent Pension bill was sustained was attended by unusual excitement. The the public interests, as a faithful, effifriends of the President and the supporters of the bill were each vigorous and trenchant in detense of the veto, and able, eloquent and caustic in the effort to overcome it. The measure attracted widespread interest in view of the sweeping benefits it proposed to confer, and the influence brought to bear in its favor and against it culminating in the extraordinary scene in the House in its final struggle for legal existence, gave it the character of a National question. The administration will claim this as a conspicuous conquest. In the fact of a great popular sentiment to which all parties have yielded obedience, and in opposition to a majority of Congress in which ill-advised pension tayors have found too ready acquiescence, the veto stands as a striking example of Executive courage and independence, and its confirmation by the House justly ranks it as a victory for the President.

Secretary Manning's successor has not yet been nominated, and it is as much a matter of speculation as ever. Meanwhile the all-wise prophets of political sagacity continue to name the coming Secretary, and to predict other changes in the President's official household. The fact is overlooked that there is a man in the White House who plays a strong hand in such matters. He usually appoints whom he wants, regardless of clamor, regardless of influence. A problem in Euclid is not more difficult of solution than to forecast from a given premises the actions of the President as regards appointments. In this case, grave political considerations are to be weigh ed, important commercial reasons are not to be slighted, and the character and ability of the man for the place, are the subjects of careful, earnest and solemn thought on the part of the President. He is in nohurry and wisely so. The nomination will undoubtedly be made before the adjournment of Congress to enable the Senate to confirm. The employes of the Treasury Department view the change of Secretaries with some alarm. Under Mr. Manning there have been lew changes among the clerks, and a grateful feeling of security has generally prevailed. A new Secretary necessarily brings some changes among the chiefs, and it is an interesting question of their own safety. It is thought that Mr. Manning's policy, which was so fully approved by the President will be followed by his successor.

ports. His house is still a house of mourning and it is not at all probable that he would entertain matrimonial intentions.

The investigation into alleged election outrages in Texas, now in progress in the Senate, is having the same developments that usually attend such proceedings. The complainants present a strong case, producing a "cloud of witnesses" who testify from personal knowledge. The defense then comes forward with an equally vigorous denial, and a mass of contradictory evidence from which it would appear that in no State are elections as orderly and as honestly conducted as in Texas. It is almost impossible in these investigations to get at the real truth. The possitive evidence is given on both sides. The charges of irregularity, intimidation and crime, if ever so true, are always met by the testimony of equally emphatic dental. The one asserts and proves, the other denies and proves.

The resignation of the late Superintendent of the mail Service, creates fresh hopes in the Democratic Congressional breast, and new fears in the mind of the Republican employe. This branch of the Patent Office Department employs about 5000 Postal clerks to whom the protection of the Civil Service law does not extend. A majority of these employes who are Republicans have been retained because of the peculiar character of the work, to the mental anguish of aspiring Democrats and as small amount of disgust to their Cohgressmen. The new Superintendent being a sympathetic Democrat, and no legal restraint interfering with his power of removal and appointment, this branch of the public service may be expected to receive a larger sprinkling of administration politics than it now contains. It is difficult to conceive how the removal of these employes can be made whithout serious detriment to cient performance of their duties is only attained by experience. Democratic economy will doubtless prove equal to the problem.

The Belmont fisheries bill which has passed the House differs from that passed by the Senate on the same subject by including provisions phohibiting the transportation of Canadian products, or the moving of locomotives, cars, &c., into the United States.

It is stated with some positiveness that an extra session of the Senate will be called immediately after the adjournment of Congress to consider some treaties, and act upon important nominations. It is not thought the House will be convened in special session, as was considered probable some time ago.

The bill creating a department of Agriculture and Labor has been passed by the Senate. It elevates the present bureau to the dignity of a cabinet office. The Secretary is to collect information on the subject of labor, rate of wages, hours of labor, means of promoting the material, social, intellectual and moral advancement of the people. He is to inquire into the causes of discontent between employers and employes, and may hear sworn statements from both parties to the controversy. The weather service, now a bureau of the War Department to be, from July 1, 1887, a branch of the new department.

Society has commenced upon its season of rest, and there is an almost Sabbath stillness as compared with the January whirl of a week ago. The social carnival was formally suspended by the reception at the White House" on Tuesday evening. The venerable mansion never looked brighter, the lovely hostess never more charming, the attendance was never greater, and the music never sweeter. Lent has caused a pertect cessation of social festivities, and perhaps that sacred institution wisely inter- the N. C. R. R.
