A BROKEN HEART.

Peculiar Conditions Under Which Edward H. Palmer Survived for Months.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 28.—Edward H. Palmer died at the City Hospital yesterday afternoon under peculiar circumstances.

On December 21 last, he was admitted to the hospital, and, owing to his swarthy complexion, was assigned to the colored medical ward. He conversed intelligently with the officers and nurses, and was recognized as a man of education and refinement. To all appearances he was healthy, but an examination proved that his ailment was of a most serious nature. At times he would complain of a sudden twitching in the region of his heart, but there were symptoms and complications in the way, which rendered an accurate and complete diagnosis difficult to reach. His appetite was all that could have been desired, and for some time the contradictory symptoms was a puzzle to the attending physicians.

Yesterday morning, however, the patient complained more than ordinarily, and one of the physicians, on "sounding" his chest, heard the blood rushing to and from his heart with great speed and violence, the sounds being distinctly audible to the listener. In an instant it dawned upon the physician that one of the valves of the heart had burst. The patient admitted that he was affected with heart-disease for some years, but until his admission to the hospital here had never been treated for it.

Further examination developed the fact that the auricular-ventricular valve had been burst for several months, and that the hissing sounds were produced by the hurried, interrupted passage of the blood to and fro between the auricle and ventricle. The valve had originally served to allow the blood to pass from the auricle to the ventricle, but prevented its return to the auricle, and it is a most remarkable fact that the man has lived as long as he has. According to medical research, death would have been the inevitable result as soon as the valve gave way.

As it was, Palmer lived for four months at least, with his heart in this condition, and up to the last moment was able to converse intelligibly with all around him, remarking to his sister, who had arrived a short while before his death, that his time had come and that he felt as if he were full of blood running riot over his body. When he died there was not the least tremor or exhibition of pain, and he merely closed his eyes, after looking at all around him, never to open them again.

From his sister it was learned that Palmer was a member of a Creole family residing in the neighborhood of New Orleans, that he had been given the best education money could afford, and had held several lucrative positions in the South. He was, however, never satisfied to remain at home, and would wander aimlessly over the country, never writing to his relatives unless taken ill. He spoke English, Spanish and French fluently. Among the attaches of the hospital he was very popular, and every means was resorted to to prolong his life. The remains will be sent New Orleans to-day for interment.

Fruits of Repudiation.

RICHMOND, Feb. 26, 1887.—Governor Fitzhugh Lee has issued a proclamation convening the Legislature in extra session on March 10 next. The Governor does not assign any reasons beyond the necessities of the public business for the extra session. One of the extraordinary exigencies is understood to be the receipt of the report of the revisers of the code of Virginia laws, who have been at work for the past twelve months. It is surmised, however, it is not actually known, that the real object of this expensive meeting of the Legislature at that time is the passage of further obstructive legislation on the debt question. All the license taxes in the State have to be paid in May. The fear that such taxes may be tendered in the State's own coupons, receivable for all taxes and dues, renders additional legislation necessary, as all the previous coupons repudiating statutes have been declared unconstitutional, and have failed to keep coupons entirely out of the State Treasury. It is further proposed by the Financial Board of the State that a constitutional amendment be adopted requiring all bonds of the State not already founded in new threes, otherwise Riddleberger bonds, to be so funded within twelve months after the ratification of the amendment. Such an amendment will have to pass a succeeding Legislature and then be ratified by the people, which would require about one year. If the bondholders do not then fund, their claims against the State are simply repudiated. Meantime the coupons "receivable for taxes and all dues to the State" are the result of a contract with the State and cannot be repudiated.

Newfoundland's Embargo.

HALIFAX, N. S., Feb. 26, 1887.—Premier Thorburn, of Newfoundland, and Sir Ambrose Shea arrived here tonight by steamer from St. Johns, N. F., en route to England to urge upon the imperial government the necessity of approving of the bill, unanimously adopted by the Newfoundland Assembly prohibiting the sale of bait to American and French fishermen. The delegates express themselves as confident that their mission will be successful. The Newfoundland newspapers cordially endorse the bill, and declare it to be an absolute necessity in order that the fisheries should be saved from total destruction. The question of imposing a duty on fish entering the colony from the United States or other countries is to come before the Newfoundland Assembly in a few days.

Not Afraid of Washington.

While at the Court House, a day or two ago, Congressman Smith, in the course of a fairly sided conversation on general matters, stated that the West was God's country and that Washington is part and parcel of the latter. Asked if he was not afraid of catching the "malaria" when he went to Washington, Mr. Smith made the following characteristic reply: "When the place where the old City Hall stands was nothing but a marsh covered with rushes as high as my head and snakes glided in and out among them I used to run barefooted over the ground at all seasons of the year, and though I saw lots of dogs shaking off their tails and hind legs with the ague I never got it myself, and I don't think I'll catch the malaria when I go to Washington."—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

A BIT OF HISTORY.—The term navy tobacco is now world-wide. Its sound has gone out into all the world, in every land and in every clime, navy tobacco is well known. The originator and founder of this name and style of plug tobacco, was the late Robert A. Mayo, who, in the year 1830, manufactured it in Richmond, and for many years it was used by the Navy Department for the use of the navy and on merchant ships. The business of the late Mr. Robert A. Mayo is still continued by his son, Maj. P. H. Mayo, and his grandson, Mr. Thomas Atkinson, under the firm name of P. H. Mayo & Brother, in their large establishments on Seventh street, between Main and Cary streets.—Richmond Whig.

French Railway Jubilee.

(London Journal.)

The promoters of the French Railway Jubilee, which is to be held in Paris this year, have received a severe check, which is not altogether unwarranted. The six largest railway companies of France have declined to associate themselves with the undertaking, as contrary to historical accuracy and prejudicial to the interests of the exhibition for the centennial of 1889. Firstly, they remark, the inauguration of railways in France is to be traced to a date anterior to 1837, and to celebrate in 1887 the jubilee of French railways would lead to a conclusion contrary to facts, that France had allowed itself to be outstripped by other nations. Secondly, to organize an exhibition specially for railways, and the various branches of industries connected with them, would, in the judgment of the companies, forestall by two years the great industrial manifestation to take place in 1889, and would deprive it of an important part of its attraction and splendor. The six companies, therefore, consider it their duty to put all their forces in reserve for the centenary. Finally, the companies have called attention to the fact that a congress similar to that projected by the committee was instituted by the International Railway Association of Brussels in 1885, and the association is working regularly in conjunction with the delegates of the several governments interested, and the administrations of all French and foreign railways. The International Railway Association has decided that the Congress of Railways shall meet at Milan in 1887 and at Paris in 1889. Under these circumstances, the six companies have unanimously repeated their refusal to participate in the undertaking of the Railway Jubilee committee.
