Recently Traber seems to have secured the following notice of himself in a western paper :

"The engagement is announced of Miss Nellie Gould, eldest daughter of the New York millionaire, to Mr. J. M. Traber, a bright young railroad employee at King's Creek, W. Va. It is said the nuptials will be solemniz ed early next year."

It was copied into the Graphic, and called forth this card from Mr. Gould yesterday :

"Dear sir: The enclosed canard crept into yesterday's Graphic. This for the past year or two to my daughter, though a total stranger. I should engineer. like to know how such a report was set afloat. Yours truly,

"JAY GOULD."

Mr. Gould's reply to inquiries last night was that he had nothing more to say concerning the young man than he had already said in his note.-New York Sun:

End of the Japanese Fashion.

"Strange world this," observed a designer of the dealer in feminine finery to a reporter the other day. "What new eccentricity has it been guilty of?" "I was thinking particularly of the change in women's fashions," replied the metchant. "Some years ago we will recollect the Japanese craze which raged in this country. A more charming fashion never was designed, and you have no idea what a change it affected in the style of dress.
