DR. JOHN H. BROOKS.

Dr. John A. Brooks was born in Mason County, Kentucky, June S, 1836. His ancestors were Virginians. His father was a distinguished preacher in the church to which the Doctor belongs. Dr. Brooks was brought up on a farm, and to this fact is attributable his rugged and vigorous constitution, which enables him to perform so much mental and physical labor. He graduated with honors from Bethany College in 1856, and has since received at the hands of his Aima Mater the degree of A. M., and is now one of the board of curators. Ho was afterwards chosen Presi-dent of Flemingsburg College, in Kentucky, and presided over that institution with great ability for two years, when he resigned to devote his life to the ministry. As a minister he has been one of the most distinguished of his church both as evangelist and pastor. The various churches both in Kentucky and Missouri, over which he has presided, hold him in the highest estimation; to preside over the state association of his church in Missouri.

While Dr. Brooks has been eminently successful in the ministry, it is in the temperance work that he has been most endeared and best known to the general public,

From the commencement of the prohibition movement in Missouri, Dr. Brooks has been at its head. Calm, cool and deliberate, he has stood at the helm. Without the least spirit of dictation he has, unconsciously to himself and the public, made that public to accept his judgment on every phase of the question.

In 1883 the brewers employed Mr. Vest to canvass the state in their interests. The friends of Dr. Brooks invited Senator Vest's friends to a joint discussion, but the senator "had already made a list of appointments and could not change them." In spite of Senator Vest's eloquence another legislature was elected piedged to submission. Again the question failed before that body by the downright betrayal of the most solemn pledges of individual members. Disgusted with his party, Dr. Brooks now began to waver in his allegiance to party, and when the canvass of 1884 opened declared himself a member of the new party.

1884 opened declared himself a member of the new party. In 1884 the Prohibition Alliance, of which Mr. Brooks was the president, and the Prohibition party each met in convention in Sedalia and both conventions unanimously nominated him as their candidate for governor. It was hoped by these conventions that the Republican party would make no nominations that year and leave the field to Dr. Brooks and General Marmaduke, the nominee of the Democratic party. Had such been the case it was generally admitted upon all sides that Mr. Brooks would have been elected. That party, however, true to its general history in the South, preferred defeat under the leadership of a godless whisky dealer, to victory led by a Prohibitionist. That canvass of '84 was the most exciting and brilliant ever had in the state except when Thomas H. Benton and President Shannon measured arms in the great free soil contest. The result of the contest may be seen when it is stated that while Mr. Cleveland's majority was over 30,000, that of Mr. Marmaduke was 420.

Since the canvass of 1884 Dr. Brooks has been actively in the lecture field. His voice has been heard from Maine to Texas and from Wisconsin to Alabama.

We need not be surprised that the tariff should elicit some consideration in this campaign. When the import tax upon any given article approximates the point of prohibition, and foreign competition is shut off, the "trust" can certainly the more readily control the market value of the product.
