CHEVALIER BUTLER.

WHEN Senator Butler says that "Mrs. Wilson is not one whom the railroad would have selected" to run the Round Knob hotel, he displays the cloven hoof very conspicuously. The man who will attempt to drag the mother of his opponent into a political controversy has fallen pretty low in the scale. We think the senator has blundered just there. North Carolina politics has declined to a low level, but we are pleased to believe that the mass of North Carolinians have not fallen quite so far. It is the politicians not the people that are of colour.

Whatever may have been the failings of men in public life in this state hitherto, they have in their public utterances respected women. It was left to this valiant champion of reform, this up to date Roland, this knight of the pie table round, to couch a lance against her. How much more of this sort of statesmanship will it take to suffice? Truly, is not this a valorous man? He not only attacks a woman, but, as an added proof of his high chivalry and invincible valor, he selects a widow.

Let us swell with a proper and just pride when we contemplate this embodiment, this epitome, this double quintessence of North Carolina manhood that represents us in the Senate. Senator! There is so much of courtesy and of chivalry, of learning, of wisdom, of ripe and rounded manhood suggested by the name. Is this the best we could do toward preserving the dignity of the title?

Mr. Butler calls his paper the "Caucasian." He should change its name. It is a small thing to ask; the Senator is facile at changes; it will be easy for him. Genuine Caucasians do not follow this method of warfare; mongrels might, but not Caucasians. In this State Caucasian, like Senator, stands or should stand, for a good deal. Would Mr. Butler spoil both at once?

IN A RECENT editorial we stated that information concerning the state had never been put in attractive and accessible form. Commenting upon this the Charlotte News sets us right, in its usual courteous way, by pointing out that the Board of Agriculture has recently issued a volume on "North Carolina and Its Resources." We have not fallen in with the publication, but are pleased to learn that something is being done to attract the capital necessary to our upbuilding. We are still of the opinion, however, that the state has been poorly advertised as compared with other southern states—Arkansas, Florida, Texas and Mississippi for example.

THE railroads have claimed more than their usual number of victims this week. Two collisions in three days in which nearly forty people have lost their lives, suggests that there must have been an element of recklessness or carelessness in the matter. It is hard to understand how, with the precautions taken by the road management and the safeguards thrown around passengers, such catastrophes can befall unless railroad employes disregard orders.

WHO wrote "section 22" of the new tariff law is likely to take its place as an unsolved puzzle along with those other classic queries, "Who wrote the Junius letters?" and "Who hit Billy Patterson?"

THE energy with which Louisville is trying to elbow St. Louis out of last place, at the tail end of the ball season, is what the baseball editor would call the "feature of the game."

IMPORTERS are declaring that, so far as they are concerned, the tariff law is squeezing all the juice out of lemons.

A SINGLE boil seems to be giving Luetger more trouble than all of Job's did that worthy patriarch.

IT is at last finally settled that Paderewski has given up music. He has had his hair cut.

THE reports that come from the southwest now may be very truthfully termed somewhat yellow.

CAN it be that Mr. Hanna has ordered General Coxe to muffle his tom tom?

ABOUT BOOKS AND PERIODICALS.

[All books and magazines mentioned below may be had at Wharton's book store.]

AMONG the many excellent articles in the Review of Reviews for September are the following: "Dr. Andrews and Free Speech," "Canada and the Klondyke," "Speaker Reed on the New Tariff," "Mr. McKinley as a Reformer" and "England in the East." There is always an abundance of meat in this magazine, and they who read only one periodical will find it covers the entire field more fully than any other. There is always the same objection to it that there is to hash, however.

THE staid old Atlantic will probably always "gang its ain gait," as the Scotch would say, but it is very sure paced. It does not take up with any of the wrinkles of the periodical fadist, but it may be depended upon to say something worth the attention of serious-minded folks, always. It is rather in a class by itself among American magazines, and while its clientele is not so large as the illustrated monthlies, it may at least have the satisfaction of knowing that it is much more weighty. It opens with a contribution by Roosevelt on "Municipal Reform," in which the latter gives his views concerning the reform movement in New York. There is a second installment of "Some Unpublished Letters," by Deane Swift, and "A Southerner in the Peloponnesian War," by Basil L. Gildersleeve. The finest paper of the number, though, is "On Being Human," by Prof. Woodrow Wilson. Mr. Wilson is one of the most entertaining of our present day writers and he is both thoughtful and entertaining in this instance.

THE CENTURY, best of all American illustrated monthlies, all in all, is a fair number this month. One thing is noteworthy, the poetry of the number is above the average. "A Chopin Fantasy," by Robert Underwood Johnson, has the classic beauty of Mathew Arnold's verses, while "The Violet Gate," by Clarence Urmy, is as fresh and fragrant as a violet under the morning dew. The stories are average only.

THE Philadelphia Record critic says the sedate William Dean Howells has indulged in a Saratoga idyl in his latest work, "An Open-Eyed Conspiracy." The society that crowds that famous American watering place during the months of July and August is submitted to an exhaustive and pitiless analysis. The local color is achieved with a master hand at realism, and the same keen grasp of character-drawing that marks every novel of Mr. Howells is also revealed in this light summer study, al fresco, so-to-speak. The love study is started by the "Open-Eyed Conspiracy" of an elderly couple to interest a young girl, who is having a dull time at Saratoga. Their conspiracy leads to their own confusion and a new wedding announcement.

"THE PAINTED DESERT," by Kirk Munroe, is another American story, but one of adventure confessedly for young America. It is notable for its interesting description of that wonderful region of Arizona described in the title, "It is a region," states Mr. Munroe, "almost as little known as the deserts of the moon, and one shunned with superstitious dread by the Indian tribes who dwell on its borders as a place of departed spirits. So desolate is it, and so void of life or the means of sustaining life, that not more than a score of white men have ever gazed on its marvels and lived to tell of them." In this story a desert-wanderer on the point of dying from thirst suddenly discovers a hidden valley lying in the interior of one of the high plateaus called mesas. In this valley he discovers an old Quaker, who, with his wife and an Indian boy, have been obliged to live here for some years, owing to the impossibility of their crossing the desert to civilization. The book closes with a description of a trip down the grand canon of the Colorado. A picturesque feature of the work is the snake-dance of the Oraybi, the Moqui Indians.

SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH'S "John Marmaduke" is a romance of the English invasion of Ireland in 1649. The central figure is that of Cromwell.

ELLA MACMAHON'S "The Touchstone of Life" is a tale of love and politics, in which a novel revenge is achieved by the hero. But what will give it its chief interest to the modern reader is its attempt to deal with empire-building in Africa. Some critics have pretended to see in one of the characters a reflex of Cecil Rhodes, the dictator of Rhodesia.

CY WARMAN, the engineer-poet, has spun the story of "The Express Messenger and Other Tales of the Rail." It contains the Kipling-like story of "The Locomotive That Lost Herself." Another tells of "A Locomotive as a War Chariot."
