Washington, Dec. 27-There appears from present indications to be no longer any doubt of the final ratification of the treaty of peace. Senators and representatives who are in Washington during the Christmas holidays are convinced that the opposit tion to the policy of territorial expansion will not go so far as to cause senators to vote against the ratification of the treaty. Any opposition that may develop to annexation of outlying territory will in all probability be postponed until after the treaty has been finally ratified, and will probably develop when the questi in of a new form of government for the islands comes before congress for consideration. The opposition will urge a form of self government for the Cubans and the Philippine Islands, as far as is

Senator Martin, of Virginia, who is Washington with his wife, stopping at the Baltic during the holidays, and also Senator McLaurin, of South Carolina, who returned from Charleston on Saturday, are both of the opinion-that the treaty will not be rejected, although neither senator will definitely state his position, or what course he will personally follow until the treaty comes before the senate for consideration. It is expected that the president will send the treaty to the senate soon after the reassembling. It will be at once referred to the committee on foreign relations, and the committee wili devote a week or more to its consideration, after which it will be reported back to the senate. The senators do not like to discuss the treaty pending its consideration by the senate, as it will be considered doubtless in executive session, and it would be improper for them to go into details in advance.
