W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT.

The Loyal Temperance Union of South Greensboro is in a flourishing condition. It meets every two weeks at 4 p. m. on Friday. There are about 40 members and the meetings are well attended. The children are given temperance lessons, both from a moral and a scientific standpoint, also scripture lessons. Special stress is placed upon the dread cigarette habit and profanity. The children are well trained and seem much interested in the work.

The meetings are held at Grace M. P. church and the dues are 10 cents per year. All children desiring to join are requested to be present at the next meeting, Friday afternoon, June 14th, at 4 o'clock.

PROHIBITED HIS OWN BEER. Recently Guinness, the great "beer baron" of Dublin, erected some model tenements for the use of working people, prohibited all intoxicating liquors, even his own beer is not allowed to be sold. Lemonade and mineral waters can be had, but intoxicants in every form are shut out. Plenty of baths but no bars. Very significant.

GEN. JOSEPH WHEELER ON THE CANTEN.

At the annual banquet of the Y. M. C. A. of Summit, N. J., of Feb. 23rd, Gen. Wheeler, who was the honored guest, in his speech referred to the army canteen in the following words: "A great deal has been said about the canteen in the army which has now been abolished by Congress. For many years the argument advanced in its favor was that it was necessary because of the character of the men who enlisted in the army; that these men had been accustomed to associate in bar rooms where beer and liquor were sold and that it would be better to sell them beer in the army rather than have them go outside and become intoxicated. That may have been true in years gone by.

It is not true today and I do not believe that I am in error in claiming that one-half the enlistments in the army in the war with Spain were of the very best character of men from the farm and factory, with a large sprinkling of college graduates and business men.

SHARKS GOT FISHERMEN.

Arm of a Negro in the Belly of a Fish Near Where Fifteen Men Went Down.

Charleston, S. C., June 5.—In the belly of a ten foot shark captured last night by the crew of the lightship off Charleston bar there was found today the left arm of a negro. Since the drowning of fifteen fishermen near the lightship on Friday last a school of sharks has been skirting the water and several fishing boats have gone out for the purpose of making captures. Late last night a big shark which swam near the lightship nibbled at a hook attached to a rope and by a good strong pull he was landed. There was a desperate struggle lasting for nearly ten minutes, but the shark was finally overpowered and dragged on deck.

Other sharks ran near the ship, although they kept away from the hooks. When the shark had been killed it was decided to cut open the belly to see if he had been feasting on the fishermen. The arm of a negro was found, the bone had been snapped off above the elbow. There was nothing by which it could be identified.

No trace of the fifteen lost fishermen can be found, and it is thought that the sharks devoured the bodies. Old salts here think that the sharks were of the man-eating kind, and it is said that the condition of the arm shows that it was torn off in a struggle.

Sharks are numerous off the coast, but they are not known to have eaten people alive. The discovery of the arm has excited the fishermen to such an extent that they are afraid to venture far from land.

AN ABLE ADDRESS ON THE SOUTH

DELIVERED BY DR. PARKHURST

TELLS HIS CONGREGATION ABOUT HIS SOUTHERN TRIP.

The Meeting at Winston-Salem is Spoken Of—One of the Results of the Meeting is that the Northerner Learned to Look Upon Matters More in the Way a North Carolinian or a Georgian Does—The Inspiring Motives Patriotic and Not Partisan.

The following address was delivered by Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, D. D., a member of the "Ogden Party," before his Madison Square congregation, New York City, the Sabbath after his return from the South:

"It requires but observation to discover that God, in His construction of things, has taken care to make them in such a way that they shall not be able to stand quite alone, but shall be obliged to some extent to support themselves upon each other. We state this by saying that the best things are not complete in themselves, and become complete only through their membership in each other. In the human body, for example, the finger is not a finger really without the hand that it is attached to; so of the hand, the arm, and all the rest, they become complete only through combination with associate members.

"So close is this membership in any thoroughly organized body that when anything happens to one part it, to some degree, happens to all the rest. One member cannot sicken without more or less of malady being inflicted upon other members; one member cannot be exuberantly well without reinforcing the health or at least relieving the invalidism of every other member.

"This is a shrewd way God has of promoting among individuals a mutual interest in each other. He has constructed us in such a way that we have to give some attention to others' interests in order to the best promotion of our own interests. When history started out each man thought of himself as a thing by itself. That was as far as sociology had gone in Cain's day. As he looked upon it, Cain was Cain, and Abel was Abel, and that was all there was to it. He thought naturally enough that he was as complete a thing without Abel as with him, and so he knocked him out. This knocking down was a blunder, but a valuable blunder, for it gave God the opportunity to put in some valuable sociological work and to teach that each is a member of all and all a part of each.

"Now the seriousness of this membership relation lies in this, that we are not shut up to our own individual interests, deficiencies and responsibilities, but are participant in all the interests, defects and responsibilities pertaining to the particular organization, moral, social or civic, in which our membership inheres. Thus, for example, our own State of North Carolina, Georgia or New York may not be polygamous, but Utah is, polygamy, as it exists in Utah, does not stop with Utah, but is a pervasive infection, corrupting every state in the Union, and putting a taint upon domestic life in the entire country. I do not mean that as an actual practice it extends to every State, but that the presence anywhere in our country of the unholy abominations vitiates the sentiments, lowers the moral tone and tends to blemish the purity of domestic life throughout the nation. All that is intended by the foregoing example is simply to illustrate the principle, sufficiently evident and abundantly recognized, that wherever elements of whatever sort are combined together to form an organized whole, the whole is saddled with the responsibility of each part, and each part saddled with the responsibility of every other part, and all wrought together into a community of interest, concern and obligation.

"Now I want to go on from that point and say that it was at the impulse of just such considerations that a company of Northern people have recently made a somewhat extended tour in the South. The members of that party did not go because of their interest in the South as such—in the South as a distinct section of territory—but because consciousness of the unity which makes North and South members of each other, and which therefore converts any problem pertaining to either of the two into a problem belonging to both of the two.

"And that feature of the situation was distinctly appreciated not only by the Northern visitors but by their Southern entertainers. The conferences held at Winston-Salem, in North Carolina, were conducted in utmost frankness by the representatives of both sections, and yet from first to last there was not an bitter word spoken, so far as could be detected there was no offence taken either at the outspoken criticisms passed by the North upon the South nor by those passed by the South upon the North. Hardly could severer language have been used than was employed by one Southern gentleman in characterizing the degrading carpet-bagging policy which the North availed of after the war, but the language used was as meekly submitted to as it was richly deserved, and had the effect to estrange the conferees but to draw them only the more closely together.

"And that was rather the more paramount feature of the occasion. Its intentions were national not sectional. The inspiring motives were patriotic not partisan. The moving impulses were religious not political. The whole enterprise was Christianity working along lines of secular policy. Whether the discussions concerned themselves with racial problems or with matters of education, education industrial or education academic—the whole tenor of thought and speech was distinctly Christian, as was consistent with the fact that the auditorium where the conference convened was that of an old Moravian church.

"A large variety of Southern States was represented as well as of Northern, but, speaking for myself, I can say that I came upon the track of not a single individual who seemed to have any other feeling than that we who came from the Northern States were not meddling with what was not at all our business, but that the questions involved were so broad in their application and so national in their pressure as to demand the consideration and co-operation of all who were nationally concerned. A contradictory utterance from the South has, it is true, found gubernatorial expression since the conference concluded, but of a tone and temper so out of consonance with the animus of the conference that its publication would have been impossible had the Governor of Georgia, as did the Governor of North Carolina, come in direct touch with the personnel of the conference or for five minutes respired the atmosphere which the conference exhaled.

One of the results yielded by this tour of Southern visitation is that we learn to look upon matters more in the way in which the Southern mind regards them. Southern problems such as those of race and illiteracy, came to take upon them more the aspect with which they present themselves to the eye of a Carolinian or a Georgian. We never can aid a man except in the degree in which we are able to put ourselves in the position of the man to be aided as well as stand in the position of the one who is to render the aid. We cannot in the present exigency help a Georgian except in the degree in which we are able to put ourselves under the limitations of a Georgian, or, I should rather say, in the environment of a Georgian.

"All just discussion of those questions of race and of education now agitating the South must proceed in the light of the fact that the Southerner does not like the Negro and is fearful of what may be the eventual consequence of having so large a negro element in the population. He does not like the negro any better than the average Northerner does, the two, the white man of the North and the white man of the South—carry themselves toward the negro with just about the same amount of Christian consideration; only of the two the Southern white man has perhaps this ad-

Having decided, owing to ill health, to retire from the drug business, I have sold my entire stock of drugs, fixtures, etc., to the Sykes Drug Company, and in doing so take this method of thanking my friends and the public generally for the kindness and liberal patronage which I have enjoyed in the past, and would ask for my successors a continuance of the same. Mr. A. J. Sykes, who will assume charge of the business in the future, is a skilled and experienced pharmacist, whom I can heartily recommend. The new firm is in every way worthy of your confidence, and I bespeak for them your support and encouragement.

Very respectfully,
GASTON W. WARD.

Having bought the stock of drugs, fixtures, etc., of G. Ward, we hope by polite and prompt attention to business to merit a continuance of your favors. Neither time nor pains will be considered in pleasing you. We ask only a trial to convince you.

Very respectfully,
SYKES DRUG CO

All accounts due Ward's Drug Store are payable to me and I would ask those owing accounts to call and settle as promptly as possible. I will be found with my books at the Sykes Drug Co.

In the Mayor's Court.

Several cases came before the mayor at the sitting of his court yesterday, and a few dollars were added to the city's treasury. Kile Jones, colored, was fined $7 for being drunk and disorderly; a white man named McMasters was fined a similar amount for disorderly conduct; Dick Causey, white, was fined $5 and costs for being drunk and down. Upon promise to do better he was let off with the costs, and the fine left standing over his head to insure his future good behavior. Will Cohen, a street carriage driver, paid $3 for leaving his team standing in the street.
