What the Ladies of the Woman's Club are Doing

The people of the South will not suffer this winter from hunger, as the cry for food conservation that has gone up all over the land did not fall upon deaf ears. The women of our Southland have responded nobly to the call, and are doing their part today just as their mothers and grandmothers did in the past. They are learning rapidly the lesson of food conservation and are canning everything in their sight. So zealous have the women become that one man was heard to remark that he was afraid to go home, for fear that his wife would can him.

Pantry shelves are groaning beneath their weight of well filled cans and jars that are a pleasure to the eye. These too by the hundreds and not by the dozens as of yore.

There is a lively spirit of good natured rivalry among the housewives. On every hand such remarks as this are heard: "How much canning have you done?" "I have canned a hundred quarts." This is music to the ears of those who are interested in the conservation of food and the prices of foodstuffs this winter, for it is in this way that prices will be kept down and the necessities of life remain within reach of the man of limited means.

The Home Economic Department of the Woman's Club of Greenville has been doing a fine work by contributing all surplus vegetables from their home gardens and canning them. In this way 197 cans have been filled with vegetables that would otherwise have been wasted.

These canned vegetables will be for sale at reasonable prices and the returns will go into the treasury of the Club.

William London Back to High Point

William London, who has been connected with the Daily News for the past two months as advertising manager, has resigned his position, which takes effect tonight. Mr. London will go to his home in High Point, from where he will take a trip North for his vacation. After returning, he will again engage in newspaper publicity work.

"Fat Boy," as London is affectionately called by his friends, has proved a valuable member of the Daily News staff, and it is regret that he sees fit to leave the paper at this time. That he will succeed in the work he will reenter is already conceded, for he is a live-wire and hustler in every sense of the word.

general, with a guard of war-veterans in attendance, came to pin the War Cross on the breast of Madame Pellequer, the local schoolmistress and mayor, for her gallant conduct.

Mme. Pellequer is one of the modest heroines whom France has reason to be proud of. When the war broke out Mme. Pellequer was teaching school in Quesmy, while her husband was similarly employed at the neighboring village of Maucourt. Her husband left for the front, and she took over his pupils. The Germans occupied Quesmy, and found Mme. Pellequer installed as mayor, maintaining order and attending to everything. She it was who first refused to salute the invaders, who, for once, overlooked this insubordination.

On one occasion, the commanding officer visited the school and remarked that the provinces of Alsace-Lorraine
