

Liberal Suggestions Made By Conservative Usually Discredited

By CHARLES P. STEWART
Central Press Staff Writer
Washington, March 8.—Whenever a conservative says anything, radicals are so in the habit of shying bricks at him that they instinctively let fly in his direction even when he chances to make a liberal suggestion.

For example, while it is true that President Silas H. Strawn of the United States Chamber of Commerce probably did not intend to put himself on record progressively, in arguing recently that every citizen with an annual income of 1,000 or more ought to "pay something" toward supporting the government, in order to make him "tax conscious," he really was expressing a very advanced idea.

Instead of recognizing it as an enlightened concept, however, all that the "common people's" spokesmen seem to sense in President Strawn's utterance is a complete failure to realize that no self-supporting citizen does escape contributing to the government's upkeep.

A Dayton (O.) newspaper published by James M. Cox, former Democratic presidential candidate, sums up liberal criticism of Strawn's contention in a forceful paragraph.

Says this paper:

"The federal government, through its excises and tariffs, levies on the necessities of life taxes which increase their cost. Every citizen, however poor, who earns his living, pays these taxes, but—

"The taxpayer doesn't know he pays them."

Exactly. The average taxpayer has no notion how he is being soaked. Would he continue to stand it, if he did?

President Strawn wants him let in on the secret.

One may justifiably wonder if Strawn has maturely considered what he is advocating. If ever an administration was the creation and embodiment of just such folk as President Strawn and his United States Chamber of Commerce Associates, it is the administration in office now—and he demands that all the people he made as acutely "conscious" as possible of the stiff price they are paying for it!

But that's what he says. "Tax conscious!"

One of the brainiest men in congress today is Representative David J. Lewis of Maryland.

Pre-eminently he is a tariff expert; was a member of the original federal tariff commission—and is far from an enthusiastic protectionist. That is to say, he considers that protection has been vastly overdone and abused.

"Nevertheless," admits the Marylander, "a situation occasionally arises in which it is to the public interest to encourage some struggling, infant industry. In such instances, aid should be extended, but it should not take the form of a tariff; it should take the form of an over-and-above-board subsidy. The industries, however, prefer the tariff method, because it can be continued, without attracting much attention, long after the excuse for it has passed.

"To the interest which is being benefited, the objection to the other method is—

"A subsidy's visibility is too high."

Personally Representative Lewis is for "high visibility" in matters of taxation. As he says it gives the folk who foot the bill at least a chance "to holler."

For this stand, because he is known as a thorough liberal, the progressives commend the Marylander warmly.

Now President Strawn of the United States Chamber of Commerce takes a similar stand—that is, for "tax consciousness" which surely, in effect, is the same thing.

But because Silas has a reputation as a reactionary, instead of commendation, the progressives give him hades.

National Business Women's Week Set Aside By Gardner

Daily Dispatch Bureau.
In the Air Water Hotel.
BY J. C. HANKFVILL

Raleigh, March 7.—This week has been proclaimed as "National Business Women's Week" in a proclamation issued by Governor O. Max Gardner. In this connection it is recalled that Governor Gardner was one of the first and leading exponents for woman suffrage in North Carolina and that his advocacy of the ballot for women in 1920 probably lost him the nomination for governor at that time. Since that time, all of those who opposed his position on woman suffrage have come over to his stand.

The statement he issued is as follows:

"The active participation of women in public life in this country within recent years has had most beneficial results. Whether in business or in government, their influence has been a positive and constructive force. So great has been this influence of women in our public life and so complete has been their patriotism that they are today no longer considered a class set apart. They are as much a part of our national life as though they had from the beginning been active leaders in business, education and in government.

"It is with distinct pleasure that I set apart the week beginning March 6 and ending March 12 as "National Business Women's Week." I do this in appreciation not only of the signal contribution to the civic and social life of our country by the Federation of Business and Professional Woman's Clubs, but also in honor of patriotic women everywhere."

MAJOR MELENDON TO RUN CAMPAIGN FOR EHRLINGHAUS

cause. The first was the decision by General Albert L. Cox not to become a candidate. Cox was generally considered the biggest single threat standing in the way of the smooth progress of the Ehringhaus campaign. Many in political circles here believed that if Cox had become a candidate he would have made it virtually impossible for Ehringhaus to get the nomination, even if he had not succeeded in getting it himself. One of the main reasons Cox decided not to run, according to opinion here, is that he found that Ehringhaus was already pretty deeply entrenched and that many of those he had been counting upon to support him had already given their support to Ehringhaus. So, regardless of whether Cox personally supports Ehringhaus, most of the political thought here is agreed that Ehringhaus has greatly benefited from his withdrawal, since it has averted about the only thing that could have caused a split in the Ehringhaus ranks. If Cox eventually announces that he will support Ehringhaus, it will, of course, help the Elizabeth City man still more.

The naming of MeLendon as his manager and MeLendon's acceptance of the appointment is being interpreted as another indication of the basic Ehringhaus strength in all sections of the State. It is also being interpreted as an indication of Ehringhaus' strength with the American Legion, of which Major MeLendon has been an active and influential member. Some think his selection of MeLendon may be a bid for additional Legion support, though it is pointed out that MeLendon has distinguished himself more in his legal practice than he has in Legion affairs.

That MeLendon will be of tremendous assistance to Ehringhaus in western North Carolina in particular, is the belief of many, because of the part played by MeLendon in securing the conviction of Wallace Davis, former president of the Central Bank and Trust Co., of Asheville, and of Colonel Luke Lea and Luke Lea, Jr., for MeLendon, appointed as special counsel by Governor O. Max Gardner to assist the solicitor in the prosecution of the cases against Davis and the Lea's, is generally credited with being the man, who more than anyone else, was responsible for their conviction. This fact may turn some of the Asheville and Buncombe county political leaders against MeLendon and Ehringhaus, but is likely to win the general approval of the rank and file of the people in Buncombe and the counties on west, according to political belief here.

It is being reported here that A. J. Maxwell is also considered naming a prominent American Legion man as his campaign manager, and the name of Major George Freeman of Goldsboro, is being mentioned as a possible choice. Maxwell maintains, however, that he has not yet taken up the matter of a manager with any one and that he probably will not announce his manager for several weeks yet. Several friends of Major Freeman here maintain he would not manage Maxwell's campaign, even if he should be asked to. He would probably have supported Cox, had he become a candidate, his friends say—might even have become his campaign manager. But few class him as a member of the Maxwell following.

Last week Maxwell scored two technical knockouts on Ehringhaus. Now Ehringhaus comes back with two on Maxwell.
