A STRANGER'S TOMB.
When Christ was born in Bethlehem
No shrine was His nor diadem;
And when He suffered Calvary's doom
They laid Him in a stranger's tomb.
A stranger's borrowed tomb.

He would not try for earthly thrones.
He would not turn to bread the stores.
He would not leave the cross till dead,
He had not where to lay his head
Save in a stranger's tomb.

But now He knows the Father's smile,
The glory of the "second mile."
The fellowship of hearts that pray,
The high reward of that dread day
That closed in a stranger's tomb.

But some would nail His hands to creeds,
Those hands so rich in loving deeds,
Would carve Him cold in stone and glass
And bury Him in rites, alas!
So like a stranger's tomb.

Today within His church He stands
And begs it to unbind His hands,
Lest, false to love and faith and truth,
It stifle still His deathless youth.
Itself a Stranger's tomb.
—Henry H. Barstow.

Miss O'Brien Is Guest of Honor

Misses Sallie Lou Burchette and Thelma O'Brien were charming joint hostesses Friday evening at the home of the former at a surprise birthday party honoring Miss Marie O'Brien. Quantities of cut spring flowers were artistically arranged throughout the house, emphasizing the Easter color scheme of green and white, which was further carried out by comports of green and white mints. The guest of honor was the recipient of many lovely and attractive gifts which were opened and displayed on a table in the living room. After dancing until a late hour, the guests were served an attractive salad by the hostesses assisted by Mrs. J. L. Burchette.

Girl Scouts Have Meeting Thursday

The Girl Scouts of Troop 1 held their weekly meeting last Thursday at their cabin on Gary street. About forty members were present. After roll was called, and dues collected, there were classes in nature held by Miss Carrie Burton, signaling by Elsie Powell and sewing by Mrs. Jack Carter, first aid by Velma Johnson and tenderfoot work by Ann Watkins. Several tenderfoot tests and signaling were passed. After classes there was a candy pull which was enjoyed by all. The meeting closed with the singing of "Taps" and the scouts returned to their homes. JOSEPHINE MARTIN, Scribe.

Meredith Alumnae Meet in Warrenton

The monthly meeting of the alumnae of Meredith College members of the Meredith Club here met Thursday afternoon in Warrenton with Mrs. Walter Gardner at her home. Sixteen members were present and three visitors, Misses Katherine Moseley, Margaret Blaylock and Jane Parker. Misses Moseley and Parker being Warrenton girls who are now students at Meredith. Both have been recently elected to important offices at the college. They told the club of interesting events at the college lately. Readings were given at the meeting by little Misses Patsy Rogers and Peggy Parker, daughters of club members, and Monroe Gardner, little son of the hostess. The program was concluded by the reading of some current events at Meredith by Mrs. James Irvin Adams. Mrs. W. W. Parker, president of the club, read a letter of thanks from Miss Margaret Peacock, secretary of the Baptist Student Union for shrubs and bulbs recently donated to the college by the club members. A word of greeting to the club for its former member, Mrs. W. C. Martin, of Wilmington, was also read. The members voted to take as many as possible of the juniors and seniors of the Henderson, Warrenton and Middleburg high schools to Meredith for the first week-end in April the occasion having been set aside as hospitality week-end. The hostess served a refreshments course of sweets with nuts using Easter decorations and this was followed by hot coffee and wafers. During the social hour the club was invited to hold its April meeting with Mrs. H. A. Moseley at Warrenton.

Huey Long Is Impressive In Senate When He Makes Oratorical Debut There

By CHARLES P. STEWART
Central Press Staff Writer
Washington, March 26.—Huey P. Long touched off his first bomb in the United States senate the other day.
Ever since the beginning of the campaign to play him up as a pajama-clad freak, I have had a suspicion that an attempt was being made, by interests I surmised he must have attacked as governor of Louisiana, to kill Huey with ridicule. Inasmuch as potent interests seldom bother to go gunning for small game, I inclined to classify him as probably a man of real ability and independence.
I think his first speech in the senate bore out this theory—both as to the senator's quality, and as to the likelihood that there are influences in the land which would be happy to destroy him.
Space is lacking to repeat here much of what Senator Long said, and there is no necessary fear it anyway; the nub, at least, of his remarks doubtless will have been quoted already. Nevertheless, he employed one rhetorical figure that I would like to recall, as a representative utterance.
"It is easy enough," quoth the senator, in effect, "to see what is the matter with this country."
"The water (meaning the national wealth, as fast as the workers are able to produce it) which ought to be available for all mankind to swim in, has been siphoned out, for the benefit of a very few, until nothing remains but a puddle so small that only stagnation can possibly exist in it."
An orator who can evolve, off hand as picturesque comparisons as this naturally does not need to worry lest he be ridiculed out of public life.
On the contrary, Senator Long unquestionably has accepted what was intended to be ridicule as first-class publicity for himself, and made the most of it.
His enemies, aiming to injure him simply have invested him with a personality—an eccentric personality, to be sure, but all the better for being so, to an individual like the senator, who so fully understands how to turn eccentricity to his own advantage.
This was evident as soon as he arose to address the senate.
The chamber, which had been near-ly empty, filled up immediately. Within a few minutes the galleries were crowded. Lawmakers even tore themselves away from the tax debate in the house of representatives and hurried to the other end of the Capitol building to listen to Huey Long.
Everyone was curious, because of the advertising he has had.
Of course the attention he was attracting imposed upon the new senator the necessity to make exceptionally good, or his auditors, disappointed might have tended to acquiesce in the valuation which his foes have tried to place upon him.
However, he did make thoroughly good.
Not, indeed, that he pleased all his hearers.
In fact, he gave deep offense to several staid, conservative old senators by his brusqueness of manner, which, they considered, should have been, in a freshman, far more modest and deferential.
But Huey does not strive to please Modesty is anything but conspicuous in his make-up.
He exuded self-confidence, during his talk, like a four-term veteran.
For all that, he is not ridiculous; he is formidable.
It was obvious throughout his entire address—not a long one—that even the buffest of the old-timers did not care to enter into any controversy with him. One or two of them got up and went out indignantly and a number of them spluttered in the cloakrooms for an hour afterward, but there was no attempt to answer the Creole State solon.
Clearly Senator Long has ideas and he expresses them forcefully.
He possesses especially the gift of effectively de-bunking mere palaver—an immensely useful gift on Capitol Hill.
