ROADSIDE MARKET TO BE PROFITABLE

Big Opportunity This Summer for Farmers Living On Main Highway

Daily Dispatch Bureau, In the Sir Walter Hotel. BY J. C. BASSERVILL.

Raleigh, May 12.-This summer when the city and town consumer will be looking for better bargains in fruits, vegetables, melons, poultry products and the like, is a good time for the farmer living on a favored highway to prepare a roadside market from which may be sold these products at economy prices, according to Dr. J. G. Knapp, marketing specialist at North Carolina State College.

There are a few fundamentals of good marketing practice which should be followed, Dr. Knapp says. The roadside stand should be kept neat and attractive. There must be space for the parking of cars and a sign should be placed far enough ahead of the market so that the car driver may have time to make up his mind about stopping. The farm home which has a pleasing grove of trees in front makes an ideal place for the roadside market. Particularly is this true, if the market owner will have a screened container in which to keep those items which need protection.

Last year the Piedmont Branch Station near Statesville sold practically all of its surplus fruit and vegetables at a roadside market conducted on the honor system. The produce was placed in neat container and the price list was plainly shown. The buyer was asked to make his choice and deposit the money as shown. As many as 25 cars were found about this

It is true ,ss stated in a detailed story yesterday hinting at a coalition between the Fountain and Maxwell forces, that a large number of employes of the State Department of Revenue and other State departments.

were present to hear Fountain speak and produced the major part of he applause. This applause 1/2 cape cially marked whenever he assailed either Ehringhan . Governor Gardner or the personnel commission. As a result many got the impression that many of these employes, most of whom are openly supporting and working for Maxwell, were unusually friendly to Fountain. But those who know the facts, know that much of this applause was facetious and that many of the Maxwell supporters who applauded Fountain so vigorously were merely kidding him.

Most of the State employes here are still sensitive from two salary cuts within the past year and consequentamong ardent Democratic drys. ly enjoyed Fountain's vigorous assaults upon both Governor Gardner and the Personnel Commission. And

The thing that is attracting more people to Robert R. Reynolds than anything else is his opposition to the present prohibition laws and his advocacy of their revision so as to make the liquor business, now tax-free, bear some of the cost of government. Reynolds' opposition to special privilage and the so called "big interests" is also making a big appeal to many to profit by the development of his people and winning much additional support. eral Brummitt pointed out. "Expenditures for transportation, board and loding of a candidate while campaigning for nomination are not included in the limits fixed in the law and hence do not have to be reported. "These limits do include, however, all contributions and expenditures made within one year of the primary, as well as all made after the holding of the primary as well as those ex-penditures incurred bfeore. This means that expenses incurred before the primary but not paid until afterwards, are within the terms of the law and the limits set out and must be accounted for. "The limit of expenditures also applies to those made at or under the direction of the State headquarters of a candidate and also those made by a county or other headquarters," Mr. Brummitt continued. "It applies to county managers as well as to State managers. A person who makes an expenditure in behalf of a candidate must report it to that candidate or his campaign committee within five days thereafter. A person receiving a contribution for a candidate must report it to the candidate or his campaign committee within five days. Failure to do either is a misdemeanor. The reports must be made to the Secretary of State or Federal, state or district offices."
