Two Solutions Offered In State Money Dilemma

Henry Burke, of Budget, Would Slash Departments, While Treasurer Stedman Would Cut Highway Funds Also; Finance Heads Consider Course

Daily Dispatch Bureau, Raleigh, July 12.—How to balance the State's budget, or at least how to balance the State's schools, departments and institutions operating during this present fiscal year on the revenue in sight, since it is admittedly impossible for the State to borrow any more money, is being discussed here today by the Council of State, the Advisory Budget Commission and Governor O. Max Gardner.

The State departments. The question before this conference today is where and how to make the cut. Governor Gardner, it is understood, will make no definite proposal, but is seeking rather the counsel and advice of the members of these two State agencies to guide his actions as director of the budget. Two plans have been proposed, one by Henry Burke, assistant director of the budget, and one by State Treasurer John P. Stedman.

New Leaders In Congress If Democrats Gain Power

Radical Wheeler of Montana And Huey Long of Louisiana Would Yield Big Influence; Republicans Admit No Losses, But Democrats Are Confident

Without attempting to argue one way or the other, it certainly is not unduly partisan to recognize that conditions in Washington will develop various highly interesting aspects if the Democrats do win a clean-cut victory in November.

Surely, too, it is reasonable to look for a Democratic congress in the event of the Democratic presidential victory.
