Acreeage In Cotton Cut For 3 Years

Cooperative Statement Says Growers To Get Less Per Acre This Year

New Orleans, La., Nov. 19. (AP)—Cotton acreage has been steadily decreased during the last three years, but is still far from the acreage figure of 1922, when an unprecedented expansion began, the American Cotton Cooperative Association reported today.

Land in cotton in 1922 totalled 30,500,000 acres, with prices at 16 cents a pound, the statement said. Under the stimulus of a 22-cent-per-pound price, the average increased during the next five years by a total of 16,500,000 acres, ending with the record-breaking crop of 18,000,000 bales, which brought the price down to 11 cents a pound, the report said.

"More than 10,000,000 acres have been taken from cotton, but 6,000,000 more must be taken out if acreage is to return to the level of 1921," it was reported. "The cotton cooperative records do not indicate that the deflation process will carry acreage entirely down to the 1921 level, as 1923 acreage was below normal, but they do indicate a likelihood of a decrease for at least one more year.
