

BANKERS ATTEND DURHAM MEETING

F. B. Robards Presides At Session To Discuss New Bank Set-Up

A group of Henderson bankers attended the meeting in Durham Thursday night of the Group Four section of the North Carolina Bankers Association, at which time the new code for the banking business was discussed, together with the new scale of charges to be imposed in banking services after the first of the year. There was general agreement on the proposals submitted, and which have already been approved by group meetings in other parts of the State. But no announcement will be made as to the set-up until all groups have given their approval, or until it has been found that there will be no changes in the schedules.

Frank B. Robards, cashier of the First National Bank here, is president of Group Four and presided at the meeting Thursday night, which was held at the Washington Duke hotel. Attending the meeting besides him were J. C. Gardner, manager of the insurance department of that bank, and W. A. Hunt, president, and K. L. Burton, executive vice-president of the Citizens Bank and Trust Company.

BAPTISTS PREPARE ENROLLMENT DRIVE

J. Edward Allen Leading Campaign In Tar River Baptist Association

In the Baptist churches of North Carolina preparation for the annual enrollment is nearing completion. On or near December 3 it is expected that the churches will observe loyalty day. J. Edward Allen of Warrenton is leading the movement in the Tar River Association which embraces churches in Vance, Franklin and Warren counties.

In this program North Carolina is keeping step with other states in the Southern Baptist Convention. There is, however, a new emphasis this year in North Carolina. In the enrollment in North Carolina the members of the churches will be asked first of all to give themselves in service, and then asked to undertake to contribute a definite amount for the support of the local expense of the church and for the objects fostered by the denomination. These objects are Missions, Foreign, Home and State, Christian Education and Benevolence, with the exception of the orphanage. This last named institution depends for its support upon once-a-month offering in the Sunday schools and a Thanksgiving offering.

In order to provide for a real dedication, a double card has been distributed among the churches, part one challenging each member to give himself and part two to give of his income.

Reports indicate that the enrollment this year will be unusually successful. It is believed that this success will be due to the fact that the appeal is made not only for funds but for personal service as well; that the spirit of unity in the churches as well as in the denomination at large has never been finer; and that the people on the whole have more which they can and will give.

Recently the State Convention met in Greensboro, and the reports of that meeting indicate that the Baptist people are united and face the future with high courage.

There are at present 2,375 churches in the state and on the rolls of these churches about 440,000 members.

Stark Tragedy Seen By Duke Legal Aid Clinic

Dealings With Poor Show How "The Other Half of The World Lives"; Swindlers Prey on Impoverished Victims from the Cradle to the Grave

Durham, Nov. 25.—How "the other half" of the world lives—or tries to live—is a traffic portrayal witnessed daily by the staff of the legal aid clinic of Duke University, known as "the poor man's" law office.

Substantiated stories by scores of impoverished clients reveal not only conditions of want but a double portion of misfortune in the loss of what little they have, sometimes through the inexorable processes of civil law, but more often by the villainy of swindlers and malefactors.

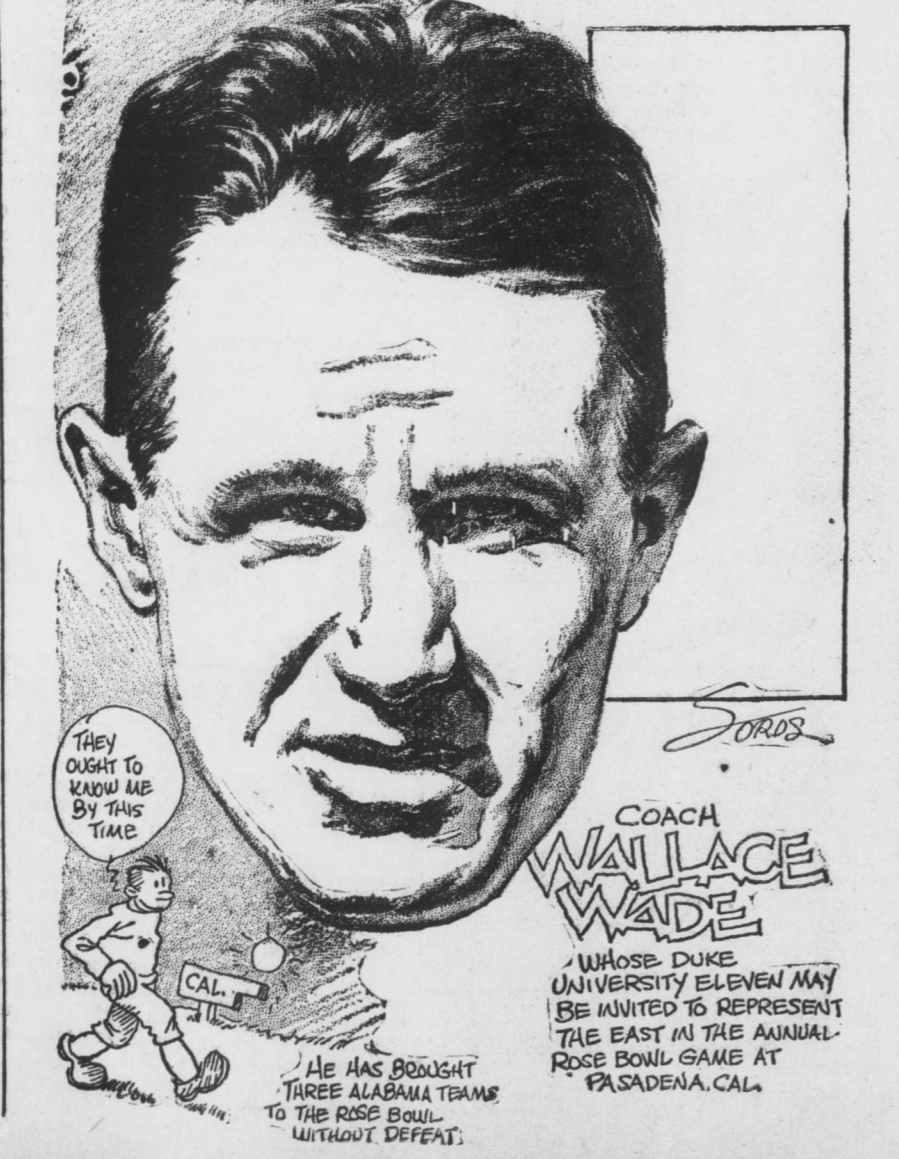

"From the cradle to the grave the poor man is the victim of the onslaughts of swindlers, vultures and scavengers who endeavor to take from him the little that he has," declares Prof. John S. Bradway, director of the clinic, in reference to such cases.

"The swindler's greatest cloak for his villainy is the fact that his victim is to poor to start suit, too uninformed to know his rights, and too frightened to protect himself. The Duke legal aid clinic has investigated many such cases, and where the client has right of action definite remedial steps are taken. The clients acts in behalf of the client only if he is found to be unable to pay an attorney's fee, otherwise the clinic withholds and the client is free to choose his own lawyer."

Professor Bradway cited the recent case of a boy who lost a leg during the course of his employment and whose compensatory money was turned over to his guardian. Promising to keep in reference to such cases, the guardian occasionally paid the boy small amounts without telling him whether they were interest or principal. Repeatedly the boy was put off when he requested information, but eventually the guardian admitted that he had lost all the money and attempted to protect himself by assigning his property. Finally realizing that his guardian had not played fair, the boy appealed to the clinic. An investigation of the incident is now under way.

In another like case a guardian was appointed for two orphan children, their estate consisting of a piece of property worth not more than $200. Except for the friendliness of rela-

CHAPTER 53
THE APARTMENT was cold and dark. Lizetta had informed no one of her impending arrival, so that the heat was still turned off and the shades were drawn. The silence and desolation of the place matched her own mood, exactly, Lizetta thought. And she was glad that she had come home.

After she had paid the cab driver and closed the door, she stood for a while in the semi-darkness gazing about her at the familiar rooms. They were the only place that she could call home. And they did possess a certain atmosphere of comfort and solidity. They might resemble all furnished apartments of their price class, but they also contained many personal objects which Lizetta and her mother had collected and treasured for various reasons, and these added a certain individuality that was more comforting to Lizetta than she had anticipated.

She drew off her gloves and moved through the half-drawn shades, turning on the heat, raising shades and pulling cords to draw aside brocaded hangings and admit the early morning light. It was a wan, gray light of February in New York—not such a flood of rose and gold as had been greeting her and Stuart on the beach in Florida every morning. But wasn't the change in her own life just such a similar contrast, Lizetta wondered drearily.

She thought, moving her luggage into her own bedroom, that she would telephone Phoebe, the maid whom her mother employed when they were in the city. But her hand halted even as she reached out for the telephone. She did not want another person there to watch her and talk to her. Why need she have anyone? There really was nothing for Phoebe to do. Certainly she could run out to any of the tea rooms in the vicinity for all the food she needed. And the activity of caring for the apartment would be only a welcome diversion from her lonely idleness. Yes, she decided, she would live there alone until she knew more about what she wished to do.

The rooms were soon comfortably warmed and Lizetta experienced a certain satisfaction in getting herself settled. Her interest was not keen, but the thought and effort which the work required were a relief from the tedious days of her courtship. Once, when she carried an armful of articles to arrange on her dressing table, she picked up a framed photograph which stood there and gazed at it intently. A sad smile on her face faded to sober contemplation as she held it.

The photograph was the likeness of a beautiful little girl who held a toy in chubby hands and gazed back at Lizetta with wide, somber eyes in which there seemed to lurk a silent question.

"Poor little Lolly! I know how lonely you must be," Lizetta whispered. "I think I shall take you away with me to somewhere and we may comfort each other. You need someone to belong to you, and so do I, Lolly. I'll come to see you this very afternoon." And after that, she worked faster as if her movements had a purpose.

She finished unpacking the bags which she had brought with her, by noon, with every article stowed away into its proper niche or space. Lizetta was a tidy person who loved system and order, and lived by them. Perhaps that was because for so many years she had been practically a maid to her two sisters who always were dashing off to some new excitement and leaving behind them a chaos of clothes, toiletries and accessories, or returning from somewhere too weary to restore order. So that it was Lizetta, usually, who kept the family possessions tidied up for the sake of her own satisfaction. But having only her own to keep in order now, it required so very little time for an orderly person never creates confusion in the first place.

When she had bathed and changed into warmer clothes, she went out and stopped into the nearest tea room for a light lunch. After all, she decided, it was better that she had some responsibility to occupy her time and attention. Had she not been going to see Lolly, she would have remained in the apartment with her gloomy thoughts and not even have had any lunch. Thoughts of Lolly crowded those of Stuart from her mind, also. She must stop somewhere for a toy or two.

Let's see, what had she taken to Lolly last? She was such a clever child that she dared not betray her own neglect of memory. Oh, yes, it had been a painting set for which Lolly had thanked her politely and graciously and then, later, she had ventured wistfully, "But I wish it had been a sewing set. Don't you think I could sew, Auntie Zetta?"

So Lizetta set out in quest of a very grown-up sewing set, and added some cunning patterns and gay materials. She decided that a new doll to wear the new dresses would not be unwelcome, and further reflected that it might be fun to help Lolly make the new clothes. For of course, the child could not really sew, but she could let her believe she was helping and she might pass a few lonely hours making the youngster happy while she avoided other contacts and planned how to continue on with her life.

Hurrying out of the department store with her purchases, and just as she reached the avenue, she joined into Virginia Kane. Recognizing the girl before she turned around, Lizetta tried to dodge her, but Virginia pounced upon her with effusive exclamations.

"Lizette! I didn't know you were in New York! When did you get back? And where in the world were you been keeping yourself? I had no idea of seeing you!"

"Well, you couldn't have, unless you are a clairvoyant. I only arrived this morning, and I didn't know myself that I would be here today until the very night I left Tropical Beach. How are you?" She affected her usual spontaneity, but was impatient to escape Virginia and be upon her solitary way.

"Oh, I'm done to a rag, dashing around with plans for a benefit party tomorrow evening. That makes you return so timely. You must be sure to come, I think it will be quite a success. Libby and Corinne are assisting, and we've warped ourselves with new ideas. How's all the crowd, anyway? Is Patty back?"

"No, I came alone. Everyone's fine."

Virginia regarded her curiously. "It must have been important business that brought you back so suddenly, and all alone. Did your bank fail and pauperize you, like they have everyone else? That isn't a bold, personal question any more, you know. It's quite the thing to be a pauper." But her own smart black jacquette and model chapeau denied any such financial status.

"No," Lizetta replied quietly, "nothing like that. I only wanted to get home early this spring and see some snow and some busy crowds." Her eyes wandered over the thronging, bustling avenue, and sparkled with the pleasure of their contemplation.

"Well, it's good to see you again, anyway. And you'll come to the party, because everyone else will be wanting to see you, too."

"I'm sorry," Lizetta demurred, "but I can't make it, Virginia. Thanks a lot, darling, just the same."

Virginia was astonished. "Can't make it? Why, don't tell me you only arrived this morning and are all dated up, already?"

"No, but I came back for a rest. It's been such a mad whirl at the beach this season that I'm all fagged. And if you want to favor me, I'd rather you didn't tell anyone you saw me. I would only add to the complications."

"You're not ill?" with concern.

"Not exactly. But I shall be if I don't slow down for a while."

"Well, what to apply the brakes after tomorrow night?" Virginia coaxed, "and be a good sport. You can refuse all other invitations. And besides seeing everyone, you know, I'll promise to introduce you to the swankiest fellow you ever glimpsed. Not only that, he is free, white and under 30, and one of that Philadelphia crowd we've been throwing car lines to for years. One of the girls dragged him into the club the other night, and now he's all the rage. You know—that Stuart Logan whose father—"

SHOPLIFTERS GET SHORT JAIL TIME

Rose and Penney Stores Object of Grabblings In Petty Thievery

Shoplifters who victimized the Rose 5, 10 and 25 Cent Store and the J. C. Penney Company store had prominent place in today's session of the police court, when jail terms were given in each instance by Mayor Irvine B. Watkins.

Esther Haskins, colored, got ten days in jail and was taxed with the costs for the theft of a hat, suspenders, gloves, stockings and a pin, all valued at $1.15, from the Rose store, and a similar judgment, the jail term to run concurrently, was imposed for the theft of two pairs of gloves, two remnants, a pair of socks and stockings and pins, all valued at $3.56, from the Penney store.

John Harrison, also colored, was charged with stealing a cap valued at 15 cents from the Rose store, and was sent to jail for three days and required to pay the costs.

Charlie Twisdale, white, was fined $2.50 and costs on each of two charges one for being drunk and the other for possessing liquor.

Bettie Adams, white girl, was charged with being drunk, and judgment was suspended, the costs being remitted also.

Department Cuts Widely Approved

by the 1933 General Assembly, although their salaries at first were $4,500 a year each. These were then reduced to $3,600 a year each and by the 1923 General Assembly to $2,800 a year. The new law specifies that the new post of fish and game warden shall not carry a salary of more than $3,000 a year. For the time being, however, the board instructed Director Eugene Etheridge of the department to act as fish and game warden, as well as director. This will save the department $468 a month in salaries alone. The employment of both England and Hargett by the department terminated immediately.

Other activities of the conservation department discontinued by order of the board, are as follows:

The State game farm, near Asheboro, which cost $7,366 last year and $18,401 in 1931, and of which about $8,000 was spent for new equipment.

The State fish hatchery at Boone, at least for the duration of the present biennium.

One salaried employe of the game farm and two employes of the hatchery will be eliminated by this move. The equipment at the game farm will be transferred to the Frank Siedman fish hatchery near Fayetteville and to the Mount Mitchell State Game Refuge.

No action was taken by the board with regard to any reorganization of the field force of game wardens. But

Creation of a system of state parks throughout the State, near the principal hunting and fishing grounds, was also recommended in a resolution adopted by the board, and Governor Ehringhaus was urged to use his influence to seek the establishment of such State parks, where sportsmen could camp at minimum cost. The proposed park-to-park highway, to link the Shenandoah National Park and the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, was also approved in a resolution adopted by the board.

No Jobs Yet For Clerical Forces

This does not mean, however, that there will be no work projects for needy unemployed women, according to Mrs. Thomas O'Berry, who is now administrator for the State. It only means that work projects for women cannot be organized under the Civil Works Administration program and at civil works wage scales. But as many work projects as possible for women will be organized under the old Emergency Relief organization, and the wages of from 30 cents to 40 cents an hour paid from relief funds.

"It is just as important that these unemployed women be provided with employment as for many of the men to get work since many of them have dependents just as the men have," Mrs. O'Berry said. "Accordingly, we are going to try to organize as many work projects for women as we can and as soon as possible. The only difference between these projects for unemployed women and Civil Works projects will be in the wage scale."

Based on a survey recently made by the State Relief Administration, a total of 8,472 unemployed women were found in the State, of which 4,474 were seamstresses, 575 trained or practical nurses, 1,490 clerical and professional office workers, 685 janitresses, 250 school lunch workers and 995 of miscellaneous classification. There are many thousands of other registered with the Employment service.
