Self-dramatization New Theory In Story Told By Kavala Girl

Police See "Psychological Motive" in Account of Playmate's Slaying

Authorities incline to belief Mary Kavala (shown with police officer) may be shielding someone else in her story of the slaying of her 8-year-old playmate, Josephine Waropay, at Hastings, New York. Theory is advanced that "psychological motive" for story may be the 13-year-old girl's love of self-dramatization. (Central Press)

By JOHN KOBLER Hastings-On-Hudson, N. Y., Jan. 2.—As police sift the details of the murder of eight-year-old Josephine Waropay, they are tending toward the theory that Mary Kavala, 13, who told them a story of killing her playmate "because she told lies about me," may be simply playing a fancied role in the crime as her background indicates a love of dramatizing herself.

Mary has shown marked dramatic ability in school, where she also was an excellent scholar, particularly in public speaking. Captain T. J. Hogan of the Hastings police said:

"I think the stage may have missed a fine little actress. She has a voice that can carry clear across a big hall. She is perfect in poise and self-possession."

Her "strangeness" Mary's "strangeness" was feared by her school mates, it appears. Vincent Waryne, 12, who lives on the same floor with the Kavala family in the rickety tenement they inhabit with several other families, including the Waropays, said:

"I never liked Mary. She scared me sometimes. She was so queer. Once she tried to scratch my brother's eyes out."

Another of the twenty children who live in the tenement, Constant Castro, said:

"I always kept away from her. Once she hit me with a stick." And from J. L. Meyers, superintendent of the Hastings Public School more light was thrown on the character of the girl.

CONTRACT BRIDGE WRITTEN FOR CENTRAL PRESS By E. V. SHEPARD FAMOUS BRIDGE TEACHER

NOT UP TO DATE I WONDER how many players realize that the weakest spot in bridge is our ancient system of leads, both at trumps and at no trumps. They are a blight on a wonderful game—an inheritance from whist, which is a different game, although the leads at whist never were any too efficient. The following hand illustrates how a game was lost because senior (the player making the blind opening lead) was not up to date on his leads.

♠ J 10 8 2 ♠ A 6 4 ♠ K 3 2 ♠ Q 7 2 ♠ 7 5 4 ♠ Q J 8 7 ♠ 8 6 ♠ A 9 4 3 ♠ A K Q 3 ♠ K 10 ♠ A 7 5 4 ♠ 10 6 5

Bidding went: South, 1-Spade; North, 2-Spades; South, 2-No Trumps; to show that he had bid a Grand suit; North, 3-Spades; South, 4-Spades, when 3-No Trumps might have been preferable, allowing North to rebid spades, if he chose.

Against a trump make the solid suit A-K-Q has an average defensive value of only 2.34 tricks. Half the time it will go around 3 times, but the occasions when either declarer or dummy can ruff an earlier round gives the holding that low value. If A-K-Q-J are led, the average defensive value is only 2.12 tricks. With so small a chance that a third round of the suit will not be heuffed, West should have led his Q of hearts, as there are 6 in 27 different positions of the remaining 3 honors where the Q lead is better than the fourth best card, and there is no position (against a trump make) where the honor opening is poorer.

West led the 7 of hearts. Declarer's 10 won. He led his K. Three rounds of trumps followed, leaving the lead in dummy. On the Ace of hearts the declarer discarded a club. That gave him 6 tricks to date. He and dummy won 2 diamond tricks. Opponents won 2 club tricks and a diamond trick. Declarer ruffed a club and dummy ruffed a diamond, giving them game.

Had the Q of hearts been led the declaring side must have lost 1 diamond trick and 2 club tricks, defeating the contract a trick, just through more modern procedure.

Had South played the hand at no trumps, an opening lead of the 7 of hearts would have yielded his side 4 spade tricks, 3 heart tricks and 2 diamond tricks. This would have given him game. An opening lead of clubs would have caused the declarer to lose 4 club tricks and a diamond or heart trick.

From Officer George F. Murray, the patrolman on the beat, who knows the families and the children involved in the tragedy, this picture was gained:

"What can you expect when the parents are away working all day and the children are brought up in the same building as two speakeasies. If they had been watched more carefully, this could have been prevented."

According to Murray, Josephine was a perfect foil for the dominating fearless Mary. The former was said to be a sweet, easily-led child, weak willed and backward in her class.

Captain Hogan said: "Only a great criminologist can answer the question: 'Why did Mary really do what she says she did?' There's no doubt she was misled by men in the town, and that she, in turn, misled her playmates. Every town has its bad kids, and, of course, town by the tracks, there are some pretty tough customers."

Psychological Motive If Mary had a love for self-dramatization, she played her greatest role when Captain Hogan took her to where Josephine's body lay in its coffin. Hogan told how he forced the girl to look at the body in the hopes of getting the truth.

"See the way she looks?" he asked. And Mary answered calmly: "She didn't look like that yesterday. She is one of the hardest, coldest kids I have ever known," Captain Hogan said.

It is the theory now that Mary's love of self-dramatization was the psychological motive for the crime. Her calmness at the undertaker's, her gesture in exonerating all suspects of complicity, some authorities say, suggests a distorted sense of histrionics.
