Raleigh, March 23-A mosquito control consciousness is rapidly developing in the city of Beaufort, Morchead City, New Bern, Wilmington and Southport following the drainage by nearly a thousand miles of ditches of salt marsh areas near these cities by CWA labor. Where the work to prevent mosquito breeding by a network of ditches has been temporarily halted because of a reduction in the labor quota, insistent public demand has arisen, for its continuation under relief funds or by county appropriation, according to Dr. R. W. Leiby, State entomologist and State director of pest mosquito control in North 'Carolina. Citizens in Carteret, Craven, Brunswick and New Hanover counties have waked up to the fact that they do not need to put up with the annoying bites of mosquitoes, Says Dr. Leiby. A network of narrow ditches that drain depressed areas in salt marshes and which permits the in and out flow of tide water, prevents the maturing of the wiggletails, hence no flying and biting mosquitoes.

"I think we will have a clear out Dr. Leiby, "That the mosquito mendemonstration in these four," says ace can be materially lessened, if not eliminated. I would like to see this phase of insect control proven practically as one of the first steps

"We have not had time yet to analyze these figures and determine from other sources has come from. Thus the bill protects the merchants in the states that have a sales tax of which there are now about 22, and also serves to increase the revenue of these states.

Willard Dowell, secretary of the North Carolina Merchants Association, says that at least $50,000,000 a year are being spent in other states by North Carolinians because of the sales tax and agrees that this bill would serve to keep a large part of this money at home. But he and his association, while not actively opposing the bill, are not urging its passage, on the grounds that its enactment might tend to make it more difficult to repeal the state sales tax.

Jesus is going to get an answer in public because he has already gotten an answer in secret. It was by personal experience that Jesus had learned the value of the inner chamber and had found out that the Father who sees in secret rewards openly. It is not for this isolated answer, however, that Jesus is returning thanks, but because God answers him every day.

New York, March 23-New York police are good and bad, of course, like all mortals, but it seems to me that on the whole they handle difficult situations with a good deal of tact and geniality. From observations this reporter has been able to make of the force in action, the current tendency to denounce the bluecoats as "Cossacks" and tougghs, is unwarranted.

For instance, I witnessed the cops breaking up a demonstration by a group of Greenwich Village artists and other afternoon. A hundred-odd paint-slingers were parading up and down the street, waving placards with said something about "Join the Arting Wage." They were obstructing strongest.

REV. JAMES MILLER HAS PASSED AWAY

Louisburg, March 23 .-- Rev. James Daniel Miller, 73, died at noon yesterday in Park View ospital at Rocky Tobacco Company, testified at a hear-Mount where he was taken Wednesday when his condition became serious after a week's illness with mfluenza. His funeral was conducted the higher priced brands. from St. Paul's church, Louisburg, this morning at 11 o'clock by Bishop E. A. Penick, of Raleigh, assisted by Rev. Frank Pulley, rector of St. Pauls church, and Rev. I. W. Hughes of Henderson. The remains will then be taken to Kinston khere interment was made in Maplewood cemetery with Dr. B. F. Huske, rector of St Mary's church, officiating.

Rev. Mr. Miller was born in Lenior county August 8, 1861. His life was devoted to service in the ministry of the Episcopal church and he had been rector of parishes in Savannah. Ga., Nebraska, Baltimore, Greensboro and Louisburg. He retired from active service two years ago and since that time had continued to reside at Louisburg. He is survived by four sisters, Mrs. J. T. Haskitt and Miss Dora Miller, of Kinston; Miss Lucy four larger tobacco companies this year amounted to approximately $1,-400,000 as compared with approximately $3,350,000 last year, a difference of more than $2,000,000, Commissioner Maxwell pointed out. Thereason for the drastic reduction in income taxes from the tobacco companies is the result of greatly reduced net earnings on which income taxes are assessed, Commissioner Maxwell explained. The generally accepted explanation for the reduced earnings of the larger tobacco companies in the State, most of which make 15-cent brands entirely, is that for the past year they cut their wholesale prices considerably in order to permit dealers to sell their 15 cent brands in competition with the 10 cent brands, This reduction in price was largely absorbed by the companies and the saving passed along to the consumers.

Miller, of Goldsboro, and Miss Ella Miller of Hamilton.

While this bill has been represent ed as being an interstate "tariff" bill, tobaccos purchased by the manufac it is nothing of the sort according to turers of the 10 cents cigarettes. Commissioner of Revenue A. J. Maxwell, since it does not apply to any tax from $3 to $2.70 per thousand. have already announced that they will then be forced into the 10 cent field. "If the government is going to grant a subsidy to the makers of 10 cent cigarettes, all the large cigarette manufacturers will be forced to entet the 10-cent field," S. Clay Williams, president of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, is quoted as saying in Washington yesterday. What Williams and all the large tobacco manufacturers want, with the exception of the makers of the 10-cent brands of cigarettes, is a flat reduction of au least 30 cents in the government tax on all brands of cigarettes. This, they claim, would help the makers of the more expensive brands, since they could then reduce their prices below the 15 cents level and at the same time help the makers of the 10 cent brands. In this manner the makers of the higher priced cigarettes could continue to pay the higher prices they have been paying for the better grades of tobacco, while the makers of the 10-cent brands could also pay better prices for the lower grades of tobacco which they use, it is pointed out, so that the tobacco farmers would benefit all the way through.

The manufacturers of the higher priced cigarettes maintain that they have purposely refrained from entering the 10-cent field for two reasons as follows:

1. That they have built up then business and reputation by using a superior quality of tobacco. 2. That they have encouraged the tobacco farmers to raise a superior type of tobacco to meet their needs and that if they went into the lower priced fields they would have to go back to the lower grades, and thus leave the producers of the better grades without a market.

That the better grades of tobacco have brought consistently good prices, even when the prices for poorer grades were low, is borne out by the records of the government, according to E. Y. Floyd, tobacco specialist in On Sales Is Near Agricultural Extension Division of

State College here, who pointed out that the better grades brought just as much in 1932 as in 1933 on those markets which had government grading. He declined to comment, however on what would be the result if the large users of these better grades of tobacco should go into the 10 cent This would immediately make it pos-
