

Henderson Wins From Oxford 8 To 7 In Tenth Inning

Langley's Texas Leaguer Drives In Winning Tally

Game Packed With Thrills With Score Tied Twice; Locals Chase Dillihay

Fletcher Langley dropped a Texas leaguer just back of first base to score Woodlief in the tenth inning of their game with Oxford here yesterday afternoon at League Park, and gave Henderson an 8 to 7 edge over the Granville county team.

Dillihay started on the mound for the visitors but gave way in the second inning after two runs had crossed the plate. He was followed by Hendrick, who pitched fair ball, working himself out of several bad holes in good fashion.

Oxford went ahead of the locals in the fourth inning when they got to the offerings of Woodlief for four runs. Henderson got two in this frame but trailed the visitors until the sixth when they pushed over another run for a tie.

Oxford threw a scare into Pahlman's crew in the eighth by getting two tallies on nice hits. Their lead was short lived, however, as the locals came through with two runs all of their own.

Dorsey Woodlief, who hurled for Tarboro in the Eastern Carolina league, opened the tenth and was hit by a pitched ball. Bill Scoggins followed him and was safe when W. Tippet errored his bun. Skipper Pahlman was out on a fly to the infield. Hendrick uncorked a wild pitch to Langley that sent Woodlief and Scoggins up a base and the stage was set for Langley's short hit, scoring Woodlief and ending the game.

A very large crowd turned out to witness the contest, which was a thrilling one from start to finish with plenty of hard hitting mixed into the contest.

Duke Blue Devils Report And Start Work Immediately

Durham, Sept. 3—Duke university's gridiron hopefuls reported this morning, were issued uniforms, and immediately got down to work in preparation for the coming season.

As is usually the case, the Blue Devils will spend the first week getting into the best of physical condition and get down to the harder work. There will be two practices daily until school opens.

With six holes in the lineup to be filled and reserves to be developed for every position, there is much work to be done before the first game of the season—V. M. I. at Lexington, Va., Sept. 29.

Lost from last year's team are Fred Crawford, Tom Rogers, Captain Carl Schock, Horace Hendrickson, Bob Cox, Nick Laney, Harry Rossiter, Walter Bebe and Al Means. The loss of these boys took the entire left side of the line and three of the four members of the backfield, including both punters and both passers.

N. C. State's '34 Football Pre-Season Work Starts

Co Captains Redding and Stephens Are First to Get Togs As Hunk Anderson Starts His Three Year Contract; Reese and Wilson Backfield Coaches There

College Station, Raleigh, Sept. 3—North Carolina State's 1934 football pre-season training program was started today with the issuance of equipment to some half-hundred Wolfpack candidates.

Raymond Redding and Kenneth Stephens, co-captains of the 1934 Wolfpack, were among the first to draw equipment. They were at the supply room in Frank Thompson gym early this morning.

Hunk Anderson, head coach who is starting a three-year contract at State, was present during the day and extended a hand of welcome to the men. The players also were introduced to Ed Kosky, new end coach, who arrived last week.

LEGION HEAD HERE DURING WEEK-END

Hubert Olive, of Lexington, who last week was elected commander of the American Legion in North Carolina spent the week-end with his wife visiting her father, R. H. Southerland in the county east of the city. The local Legion post had planned to hold its monthly meeting Saturday so that he might meet with the group, but the idea was abandoned when it was found the assembly could not be definitely arranged.

ANOTHER LABOR DAY DAWNS IN UNITED STATE

Sec. 7 (a) Every code of fair competition, agreement, and license approved, prescribed, or issued under this title shall contain the following conditions: (1) That employees shall have the right to organize and bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection.

Another Labor Day dawns in the United States with the greatest problem arising over interpretation of famed Article 7A of the National Industrial Recovery Act. Promulgated in 1933, it gives labor officials new duties and aims by its declaration that workers have legal right to collective bargaining and naming representatives of their own choosing. Unionization under the New Deal has been pushed to an all-time peak, with the American Federation of Labor constantly growing though it has been assailed frequently for its "conservative" attitude.

The Eighth Commandment

Donald Reeves, young instructor, is found shot to death in his office on the campus of Center City university. Inspector Lee, working on the case with his friend, Timothy Blade, newspaper reporter and frequent co-worker, discovers that the gun that was beside the body, found by the janitor, has disappeared. The police find an attic room that shows signs of inhabitation on the third floor of the English House, scene of the crime. After interviewing Mrs. Reeves, the dead man's widow who insists her husband committed suicide, Lee examines other members of the English staff including Dr. Wilson, department head; Dr. Henderson, Walker, Jamieson, Miss Turner, and Miss Edwards. Lee and Blade go over the case at a nearby restaurant.

CHAPTER 13
"HE DOESN'T look like a murderer, inspector." Tim's voice was reluctant.
"I know he doesn't. But I recall someone who told me this morning that Mrs. Reeves was the kind of a woman a man would do a hell of a lot for if he loved her." Lee's eyes wrinkled shrewdly.
"I said 'if she loved him.' But let it go. You may be right of course."
"But you don't think so. All right. Let's get on—we'll come back to it later. Personally, I'd rather it was Walker. There's a guy I don't like."
"His students wouldn't agree with you. He's one of the most popular teachers on the campus. And a good one, too."
"I still don't like him."
"O. K. Down for future consideration," Tim grinned. "What did the coroner say besides giving you the devil for permitting the murder to be committed?"
"Holmes says the bullet entered the heart and death was almost instantaneous. Time—eight to twelve hours, which means between eight and twelve o'clock the night before. The shot entered from above at an angle. He might have been shot while he sat in the chair."
"But he was shot from the front and no one could get behind his desk to shoot him as he sat there. There's no room," objected Tim.
"It's a swivel chair, you remember. Maybe someone came in that Reeves knew and he just swung around to talk to him."
"And the newcomer killed him instead of talking?"
"Maybe so, but I honestly can't believe that a man could walk into a room with a gun in his hands or his pocket, intending to murder me without my realizing that something was wrong. Of course he might have just opened the door and fired as soon as Reeves turned around."
The inspector shook his head. "No. For two reasons. The shot entered from above so he must have been standing over him. And it was fired only a foot or two away."
"Powder burns?" asked Tim.
"Yah, we can't find anyone who heard the shot. Of course there's nothing on the street except university buildings and a couple of fraternity houses up at the farther end. And the university buildings are deserted at night except for the night watchman. We talked to him but he was over in the buildings across the street and never heard or saw anything."
"What about the boys at the fraternity house?"
"They didn't hear a thing. That's not surprising, you know. One shot from a thirty-two wouldn't make so much noise. First of all we've got to find the gun."
Tim nodded his head encouragingly.
The detective shook his head. "Not much, inspector. She's maybe about fifty and a regular hatch-face."
"That wouldn't be either the Turner girl or Mrs. Reeves, thought Lee. "Bring her in."
"As the woman bustled in, Tim, snatching up a newspaper, offered her his chair. He retired to a window where he could hear out still give the newcomer the sensation of a private interview.
"She settled herself with a rustling of her flowered crepe dress, her hands still gripping a copy of the Sun opened to Tim's story. "Good afternoon, officer," she began. "I am Mrs. Greever, Mrs. Mathilda Greever, and a neighbor of Mrs. Reeves and this poor man." She tapped the paper lightly.
"Yes?" said Lee. He didn't like the unctuous tone in which she spoke of "this poor man."
"She leaned forward, resting one hand in its clean tan cotton glove on the desk. "I feel, officer, that it is every good citizen's duty to help the police all he or she can and I really feel that I have information which may help you to solve this despicable crime." Her hard blue eyes gleamed fervently.
"Thank you, Mrs. Greever," said Lee. "The police cannot do their full duty without the help of the people and if you have any information that will help us we shall be very grateful for it."
She looked questioningly at Tim, standing near the window with his face hidden in the paper.
"Lee caught the glance. "That's quite all right, madam. He's a sort of assistant of mine." Tim choked a chuckle behind his paper.
"The piece in this newspaper," began Mrs. Greever. "says that Mrs. Reeves told you she was home alone all evening." She looked questioningly at the inspector and he nodded. "That's what they told us, Mrs. Greever."
Her voice dropped almost to a whisper. "I happen to know, officer, that Mrs. Reeves left her apartment last night at about nine-thirty with a man and returned alone about twenty minutes after ten."
The detective shook his head. "Not
