Raleigh, Jan. 3.—The fight over the peakership of the House is not over and will not be settled until next Tuesday night, despite the efforts of one of his opponents to make it appear that the speakership is already "in the bag." Representative Laurie McEachern of Hoke, one of the three candidates for speaker said here to-

"My chances for being elected speaker are better than ever and I am not in the least worried by the claims of either of my opponents," Mc-Eachern said. "I have already contacted almost every member of the House and am confident that I will get as many, if not more votes than either of the other two candidates. I am also convinced that one of the three candidates have as many as 55 or 60 votes already pledged, as one candidate claims, since I feel confident that quite a large number of House members are coming to the caucus next Tuesday night unpledged to any one. I also am convinced that I will get as many of those unpledged votes as either of the other two candidates.

The other two candidates for the speakership are Representatives Robert Grady Johnson of Pender county Lee Lumpkin of Frankli county. Friends and supporters of Johnson maintain that he already has
