IT IS NOT AN infrequent event dummy could be entered only once or an excellent player to muddle a more. The suit could be cleared but simple hand. The very fact that that would have done no good with olay is simple sometimes makes any out entry to play off the cleared diaone of us careless. I am assured monds. ny a member of the Alpha Delta Phi Declarer ran off three spade honclub of New York that the declarer ors, hoping to find the 6 missing of the hand shown is unusally a cards divided 3-3. He succeeded only careful and able player, and I have in establishing the J against himno reason to question that statement, self. On the third spade lead both He just had a lax period.

Spades are trumps. The opening est lead of all would have been a lead is the Q of hearts. How many diamond, and the trick taken tricks can South win against and with the Ace. That play would have subsequent defense? Think it over olded the possibility of finding the until Monday. It is the toughest it twice blocked. A low diamond problem hand that I ever saw.

THIS chart shows that the farm price of rye is still far below fair L exchange value and explains why farmers want a rye adjustment program. The solid black bars in the chart show the farm price of rye, and the shaded bars show how much the price should have been for the farmer to have received fair exchange value. The fair exchange value of rye is a price enabling producers to buy the same quantity of manufactured articles with a bushel of rye as they did in 1910-14.

For July, August, and September of this year, rye farm prices have been very low again, and the difference between the farm price and fair-exchange value is nearly as great as it was in 1932 when farm prices were at the lowest level in many years. The rye program is intended to increase farm income from rye by adjusting supply and thus bringing about an improvement in price. The program also is expected to increase income through adjustment payments to producers. As the remarks of the two men shown in the chart indicate, the farmer can't buy much with his rye crop when the price is far below fair exchange value, and the businessman can't sell much if the farmer doesn't have money to buy manufactured goods.
